SOFTNER.—See Softener.

SOFTNESS, soft'nes, s. The quality of being soft, literally or figuratively.

SOGGY, sog'gy, a. (allied probably to Soak.) Wet; soft with moisture; steaming with damp.

SOHO, so-ho', interj. A form of calling from a distant place; a sportsman's halloo. Soho is also used, in Sportsmanship, to denote a hare found sitting.

SOI-DISANT, swa-de-zong', a. (French.) Calling himself; self-styled; pretended.

SOIL, soyl, v. a. (selan, sylian, Sax. söler, Dan. saler, souiller, Fr.) To make dirty; to stain; to pollute; to manure. In the Manege, to feed a horse with green food in the stable or under cover. In Husbandry, to soil cattle, to feed them with grass daily mowed for them, instead of pasturing them;—s. (stille, Germ.) dirt; foulness; pollution; the primitive earths in a state of mixture with organized matter, fit for the growth of plants; land or country; dung; compost. To take soil, to run into the water, as a deer when pursued. Among Builders, soils, the principal rafters of a roof.—Local.

SOILINESS, soyl'e-nes, s. Stain; foulness.

It yields no soiliness more than silver.—Bacon.

SOILING, soyl'ing, s. The act or practice of feeding horses or cattle with fresh grass, instead of pasturing them.

SOILLESS, soyl'les, a. Destitute of soil or mould.—Little used.

SOILURE, soyl'ure, s. Stain; pollution.—Obsolete.

SOIREE, swaw'r'ay, s. (French, evening.) An evening party.

SOIVUS, soy'vus, } s. One of the three principal SOIVYUS, soy've-us, } sects among the regular Hindoos, the worshippers of Shiva, whose mark, a sort of half-moon, is impressed upon their foreheads. The Soivus are chiefly Brahmins.

SOJA, so'ja, s. (the name of a sauce prepared from the seeds by the Japanese.) A genus of Leguminous plants: Suborder, Papilionaceæ.

SOJOURN, so'jurn, v. n. (sejourner, Fr.) To dwell for a time; to live in a place as a temporary resident, or as a stranger;—s. a temporary residence.

SOJOURNER—SOLAR.

SOJOURNER, so'jur-nur, s. A temporary resident.

SOJOURNING, so'jur-ning, s. The act of dwelling in a place for a time; also, the time of abode.

SOJOURNMENT, so-jurn'ment, s. Temporary residence, as that of a stranger or traveller.

SOKE.—See Soc.

SOL, sol, s. (Latin.) In Mythology, the Sun, which was an object of veneration among the ancients, particularly among the Persians, by whom it was worshipped under the name of Mithras. Apollo, Phœbus, and Sol, are supposed to be the same deity. The name given by the ancient alchemists to gold. In Heraldry, the gold colour in the coats of sovereign princes. In Music, the fifth note of the gamut. In France, a former copper coin of the value of 5 centimes,—see Sou. In Switzerland, a copper coin and money of account.—See also Sun.

SOLA, so'la, s. The Indian name of the plant Eschynomene aspera of Linnæus.

SOLACE, sol'ase, v. a. (sollazare, Ital. from solatum, solace, comfort, Lat.) To console; to cheer; to allay; to assuage;—v. n. to take comfort; to be cheered or relieved in grief—(obsolete as a neuter verb);

One poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and solace in,
And cruel death hath caught it from my sight—Shaks.

—s. comfort in grief; that which relieves in distress.

SOLACEMENT, sol'ase-ment, s. The act of comforting; the state of being solaced.

SOLACIOUS, so-la'shus, a. Affording solace.—Obsolete.

It is a solacious voice when it raiseth, releeveth, and quickeneth the desolate conscience with comfortable promises.—Bale (1550).

SOLANACEÆ, so-la-na'se-æ, s. (solanum, one of the genera.) A natural order of Exogenous plants, consisting of herbs or shrubs, with alternate undivided or lobed leaves; calyx usually five-cleft, rarely four-cleft; permanent; inferior; corolla monopetalous, hypogynous; stamens epipetalous, and equal in number to the segments of the corolla, and alternating with them; ovary many-seeded; style one; seeds numerous.

SOLANDRA, so-lan'dra, s. (in honour of Dr. D. C. Solander.) A genus of plants: Order, Solanaceæ.

SOLAN-GOOSE, so-lan-goos, s. The Gannet, or aquatic fowl Pelicanus bassanus, a native of the coasts of Great Britain and Ireland.

SOLANINE, so-la-nine, s. A vegetable principle which occurs in several species of solanum, and is found in considerable quantity in the shoots of potatoes which have germinated in a dark cellar; it is obtained in light feathery crystals of a pearly lustre; it neutralizes acids, forming crystallizable salts, which have an acrid taste. It is highly poisonous. Supposed formula, $C_{84}H_{68}NO_{23}$.

SOLANO, so-la'no, s. (Spanish.) A hot, oppressive wind, which occasionally blows in the Mediterranean, and particularly on the eastern coast of Spain: it is a modification of the sirocco.

SOLANUM, so-la-num, s. (Latin.) Nightshade, a genus of plants, type of the order Solanaceæ. S. tuberosum is the common potato.

SOLAR, so'lar, a. (solaire, Fr. sol, the sun, Lat.) Pertaining to the sun; measured by the revolutions of the sun. In Astrology, born under the peculiar influence of the sun. In Botany, solar flowers are flowers which open and shut daily at certain determinate hours. In Anatomy, solar plexus, an assemblage of ganglia, which are distributed to all the divisions of the aorta. In Astronomy, solar cycle, a period of 28 years, which being elapsed, the dominical or Sunday letters return to their former place, and proceed in the same order as before, according to the Julian Calendar. Solar month, the time which the sun takes to run through one entire sign of the ecliptic; the mean quantity of which is 30 days, 10 hours, 29 minutes, 5 seconds. Solar spectrum,—see under Prismatic. Solar spots, spots observable on the sun's disc; some of these vary from mere points to 50,000 miles in diameter. Solar system, that collection of bodies which contains the sun, the planets which revolve round him, their satellites, and such periodic comets as have had their returns successfully predicted. The following are the names of the primary planets in their order from the sun; to each name is prefixed the sign that stands for it in astronomical works, and a familiar object is made to represent the comparative bulk of each. Suppose the sun, characterized by the mark ☉, to be represented by a globe 4 feet in diameter, then ☿ Mercury would be represented by a grain of mustard-seed—♀ Venus, by a pea—♁ the Earth, a pea—♂ Mars, a rather large pin's head—♂ Vesta, ♀ Juno, ♀ Ceres, ♀ Pallas, ♀ Hebe, ♀ Iris, and ♀ Astrea, each by a grain of sand—♃ Jupiter, a moderately-sized orange—♄ Saturn, a small orange—♅ Uranus, a full-sized cherry or small plum. Neptune, discovered 23d September, 1847, at a distance of 3200 millions of miles from the sun, round which he revolves in 167 years, is represented by the trident ⚡ which characterizes the god of the sea, whose name he bears. Of these bodies, the following have been ascertained to have satellites revolving round them:—The Earth, one; Jupiter, four; Saturn, seven; and Uranus, six.

SOLARIUM, so-la're-um, s. A genus of Mollusca, belonging to the Trochinea, or top-shells; the shells of which are nearly discoid; not perlaceous; no spire; aperture angulated and smooth within; the edge acute; the lips wanting: Family, Trochidae. In Roman Antiquity, a piece of ground in some elevated situation, exposed to the sun, and made very level, where they used to walk for the sake of air and exercise.

SOLD, solde. Pret. and past part. of the verb to sell;—s. (sould, old Fr.) Military pay.—Obsolete.

SOLDAN.—See Sultan.

SOLDANELLA, sol-dan-el'la, s. (dim. of solidus, a shilling, Lat. the round leaves being like pieces of money.) A genus of plants: Order, Primulaceae.

SOLDER, saw'dur, v. a. (souder, Fr.) To unite or fasten by a metallic cement; to mend or unite;—s. a metallic cement, employed to unite pieces of metal, by being fused between them.

SOLDERER, saw'der-ur, s. One who solders.

SOLDERING, saw'der-ing, s. The process of uniting the surfaces of metals, by the intervention of a more fusible metal, which, being melted on each surface, serves, partly by chemical attraction, and partly by cohesive force, to bind them together.

SOLDEVILLA, sol-de-vil'la, s. (so named by Lagasca, in honour, apparently, of some person of that name.) A genus of Composite plants: Suborder, Tubuliflorae.

SOLDIER—SOLEMNIZER.

SOLDIER, sole'jur, s. (soldat, Fr. from solidus, a piece of money, the pay of a soldier, Lat.) A warrior; one who serves in the army for pay. In common parlance, a private, in contradistinction from an officer. Soldier-wood, the West Indian shrub Juga purpurea, a remarkably elegant plant.

SOLDIERESS, sole'jur-es, s. A female warrior.—Not used.

Honoured Hippolita,
Most dreaded Amazonian; soldieress,
That can equally poise sternness with pity.—
Dem. and Flet.

SOLDIERLIKE, sole'jur-like, } a. Like a soldier, or SOLDIERLY, sole'jur-le, } in a manner becoming a soldier; brave; martial; heroic.

SOLDIERSHIP, sole'jur-ship, s. Military character or skill; behaviour becoming a soldier.

SOLDIERY, sole'jur-e, s. Soldiers collectively; soldiery; military service.

SOLDINS, sol'dins, s. (from Soldin, their leader.) A sect of Greek schismatics, who appeared about the middle of the fifth century. They altered the manner of the sacrifice of the mass. Their priests offered gold, their deacons incense, and their subdeacons myrrh, in imitation of the like offerings by the wise men, made to the infant Jesus.

SOLE, sole, s. (Saxon, zool, Dutch.) The bottom of the foot; and by a figure, the foot itself; the foot of the shoe; the part of anything that touches the ground;—v. a. to furnish with a sole; a fish of the genus Solea;—a. single; only. In Law, not married. Sole corporation, one person and his successors who are legally incorporated in order to give them some legal capacities and advantages, particularly that of perpetuity, which, in their natural persons, they could not have had.—Blount. In Ships, sole of the rudder, a piece of timber attached to the lower part of it, to render it nearly level with the false keel.

SOLEA, so'le-a, s. (Latin, a kind of sandal, from its resemblance to the foot.) The Sole, a genus of flat fishes: Family, Plenronectidae.

SOLECISE, sol'e-size, v. n. To commit solecisms.

SOLECISM, sol'e-sizm, s. (soloikismos, said to be derived from the Solæci, a people of Attica, who, being transplanted to Cilicia, lost the purity of their language.) Impropriety in language. It is distinguished from a barbarism, for this may be in one word, but a solecism must be of more; any unfitness or impropriety.

SOLECIST, sol'e-sist, s. One who commits solecisms.

SOLECISTIC, sol'e-sis'tik, } a. Incorrect; in-SOLECISTICAL, sol'e-sis'te-kal, } congruous.

SOLECISTICALLY, sol'e-sis'te-kal-le, ad. In a solecistic manner.

SOLELY, sol'le, ad. Singly; alone; only.

SOLEMN, sol'em, a. (solennel, Fr. solemne, Ital.)

Religiously grave; awful; sober; formal; affectedly serious; sacred, as a solemn oath; marked with solemnities, as a solemn day. Solemn breathing, diffusing or inspiring solemnity of feeling.

SOLEMNIZATION, sol-em-ne-za'shun, s. The act of solemnizing; celebration.

SOLEMNIZE, sol'em-nize, v. a. (solemniser, Fr.) To dignify or commemorate by solemn ceremonies; to perform with legal and ritual ceremonies, as, to solemnize a marriage; to make grave or religiously serious, as, to solemnize the mind.

SOLEMNIZER, sol'em-ni-zur, s. One who performs a solemn rite.

SOLEMNNESS—SOLEUS.

SOLEMNNESS, sol'em-nes, s. State or quality of being solemn; solemnity; gravity of manner.

SOLEMNITY, sol-em'ne-te, s. (solenité, Fr.) Religious ceremony; celebration or ceremony with awful observance; gravity; steady seriousness; affected gravity; grave stateliness.

SOLEMNLY, sol'em-le, ad. With reverence and religious awe; with official formalities and due authority; with formal state; with affected gravity.

SOLE, so'len, s. (Greek, a tube.) A genus of Mollusca; shells very straight, broad, and of equal length throughout; umbones very small and terminal; cardinal teeth small; ligament long and external: Family, Myadæ. In Surgery, an oblong box or case employed in the treatment of fractured limbs.

SOLENACEA, so-len-a'se-a, s. The name given by Lamarck to a family of bivalve Mollusca, including the genera Solen, Panopæa, and Glycymeris.

SOLENTANTHA, so-len-an'tha, s. (solen, a tube, and anthos, a flower, Gr.) A genus of plants, natives of Australia: Order, Rhamnaceæ.

SOLENTANTHUS, so-len-an'thus, s. (solen, a tube, and anthos, a flower, Gr.) A genus of plants, natives of Altaia: Order, Boraginaceæ.

SOLENCURTIS, so-len-kur'tis, s. (solen, a tube, and kurtos, bent, Gr.) A genus of the Soleninae, the shells of which are depressed, thin, transverse, and oblong ovate; the valves slightly gaping at one extremity; cardinal teeth and umbones nearly central.

SOLENELLA, so-len-el'la, s. (dim. of Solen.) A genus of the Soleninae, in which the shells are oval and compressed; epidermis glossy; the hinge margin nearly straight; cardinal teeth wanting; posterior lateral; teeth numerous and sharp; anterior end somewhat truncated: Family, Myadæ.

SOLENESS, sol'nes, s. (from Sole.) Singleness; state of being sole or alone.

SOLENGNATHUS, so-le-na'thus, s. (solen, a tube, and gnathos, a jaw, Gr.) A genus of fishes belonging to the Syngnathidae, or Pipe-fish family.

SOLENTIA, so-le-ne-a, s. (solen, a tube, Gr. in allusion to the tubular nature of the fronds.) A genus of Algae: Order, Confervaceæ.

SOLENTINE, so-le-ni-ne, s. (solen, one of the genera.) A subfamily of the Myadæ, or gaping bivalves; the shells generally linear, and always open at both extremities; the cardinal teeth distinct.

SOLENTITE, so-len-ite, s. A fossil Solen, of which Lamarck describes five species as occurring in the neighbourhood of Paris.

SOLENTODON, so-len'o-don, s. (solen, a tube, and odon, a tooth, Gr.) A genus of insectivorous Mammals, established by Brandt. It consists of a single species, S. paradoxus, from Hispaniola, having a habit between that of the shrews and opossums.

SOLENTOID, so-le-noyd, s. (solen, a tube, and eidōs, resemblance, Gr.) A small electrical current which returns into itself.

SOLENTOSTOMA, so-len-os'to-ma, s. (solen, a tube, and stoma, a mouth, Gr.) A genus of fishes: Family, Syngnathidae.

SOLENTELLINA, so-le-tel-li-na, s. (solen and tellina.) A genus of bivalve Mollusca, the shells of which are oval oblong, compressed with sharp edges, both of which are curved; the umbones submedian, and not projecting much: Family, Myadæ.

SOLEUS, so-le-us, s. (solen, a sole, Lat.) In Anatomy.

SOLFA—SOLID.

tomy, a muscle of the leg, shaped like a sole-fish. It arises from the head of the fibula, &c. and is inserted into the os calcis. It extends the foot.

SOLFA, sol'fa, v. n. To exercise the voice when learning to sing, in which the syllables, do, re, mi, fa, sol, la, si, are applicable to their respective notes in the exercise;—s. the exercise of solfaing.

SOLFAING, sol'fa-ing, s. In Music, the performance of the exercise solfa; the singing of a piece of music at sight with the syllables of the gamut.

SOLFATARA, sol-fa-ta'ra, s. (Latin, from Solfaterra, a mountain of Naples.) A volcanic vent emitting sulphur and sulphurous compounds.

SOLICIT, so-lis'it, v. a. (solicito, Lat.) To importune; to entreat; to call to action; to try to obtain; to invite; to disturb or disquiet.—A Latinism rarely used.

But anxious fears solicit my weak breast.—Dryden.

SOLICITATION, so-lis-e-ta'shun, s. Act of soliciting; importunity; invitation; excitement.

SOLICITOR, so-lis'e-tur, s. One who solicits. In Law, the professional designation of a person admitted to practise in the Court of Chancery, in the conduct of suits, &c. In a Court of Common Law, he is called an attorney. Solicitor-general, an officer of the crown, who holds his office by patent, and ranks next to the attorney-general, with whom he is associated in the management of the legal business of the crown and public offices. In Scotland, a solicitor is the same as an attorney in England. He is inferior to a writer to the signet, and practises in the inferior courts.

SOLICITOUS, so-lis'e-tus, a. (solicitus, Lat.) Careful; anxious; very desirous, as to obtain something; concerned, as respecting an unknown but interesting event, usually followed by about or for.

SOLICITOUSLY, so-lis'e-tus-le, ad. Anxiously; with care and concern.

SOLICITOUSNESS, so-lis'e-tus-nes, s. Solicitude.

SOLICITRESS, so-lis'e-tres, s. A female who solicits or petitions.

SOLICITUDE, so-lis'e-tude, s. (solicitudo, Lat.) Anxiety; carefulness.

SOLID, sol'id, a. (solidus, Lat. solide, Fr.) Hard; firm; compact; full of matter, or not hollow, as a solid globe; not fluid; having all the geometrical dimensions; strong; sound; not weakly; not empty; not light, trifling, or superficial. In Botany, of a fleshy, uniform, undivided substance, as a bulb or root. In Geometry, solid angle, an angle formed by three or more plane angles meeting in a point, and of which the sum of all the plane angles is less than 360°. Solid problem, a problem which cannot be constructed by the intersections of straight lines and circles, but which requires for its geometrical construction the description of one or more conic sections. Its algebraical solution leads to a cubic or biquadratic equation. A regular solid is one which is terminated by equal and similar planes, so that the apex of their solid angles may be inscribed in a sphere,—see under Regular. Solid numbers, numbers arising from the continued multiplication of three factors, as 30, which is = 5 × 2 × 3. In Military language, solid squares, a square body of troops; a body in which the ranks and files are equal;—s. a solid substance. In Geometry, a body which has length, breadth, and thickness; or, it is a body contained under one or more surfaces, as a surface is under one or more lines. In Anatomy and Medical science, the solids

SOLIDAGA, sol-e-da'ga, s. (solida, I unite or consolidate, Lat. on account of the vulnerary qualities of the plants.) Golden-rod, a genus of Composite plants: Suborder, Tubulifloræ.
SOLIDATE, sol'e-date, v. a. (solido, Lat.) To make solid or firm.

This shining piece of ice —
 Thy verse does solidate and crystalize.—Cowley.

SOLIDIFICATION, so-lid-e-fe-ka'shun, s. (from Solidify.) The act of making solid; the process of becoming solid.

SOLIDIFY, so-lid'e-fi, v. a. (solidus, solid, and facio, I make, Lat.) To make solid or compact;—v. n. to become solid.

SOLIDISM, sol'id-izm, s. In Theoretical Medicine, a doctrine which ascribes to the fluids of the animal body merely a passive and subordinate rank in the phenomena of life, which it regards as residing essentially in the solids.

SOLIDIST, sol'id-ist, s. An adherent of the doctrine of solidism.

SOLIDITY, so-lid'e-te, s. The state of being solid, literally and figuratively; hardness; density; compactness; moral firmness; validity. In Geometry, the solid contents of a body.

SOLIDLY, sol'id-le, ad. Firmly; densely; truly; on firm grounds.

SOLIDNESS, sol'id-nes, s. The quality of being solid; solidity.

SOLIDUNGULATES, sol-e-dung'gu-lates, s. (solidus, solid, and ungula, a hoof, Lat.) A tribe of Mammalia, which includes those having only a single hoof on each foot, as the horse, ass, &c.: same as Solipedes.

SOLIDUNGULOUS, sol-e-dung'gu-lus, a. Having hoofs that are whole or not cloven, as the horse.

SOLIPIDIAN, so-le-fid'yan, s. (solus, only, alone, and fides, faith, Lat.) In Theology, one who maintains that faith alone is sufficient for salvation;—a. holding the tenets of Solifidians.

SOLIPIDIANISM, sol-e-fid'yan-izm, s. The doctrine or tenets of Solifidians.

SOLILOQUY, so-lil'o-kwe, s. (soliloque, Fr. solus, alone, and loquor, I speak, Lat.) A talking to one's self; a discourse uttered in solitude; a written composition, reciting what it is supposed a person speaks to himself.

SOLILOQUY, so-lil'o-kwe, s. (soliloque, Fr. solus, alone, and loquor, I speak, Lat.) A talking to one's self; a discourse uttered in solitude; a written composition, reciting what it is supposed a person speaks to himself.

SOLIPED, sol'e-ped, s. (solidus, solid, and pēs, pedes, a foot, Lat.) An animal whose hoofs are not cloven.—See Solipedes and Solidungulates.

SOLIPEDS, so-le-pe'dis, s. A tribe of ungulated quadrupeds, comprising the horse and its allies, the ass and zebras, to which, as aberrant genera, are added the camels and llamas. The tribe is distinguished by having but one apparent toe upon each foot, or, in other words, a single and undivided hoof.

SOLITAIRE, sol'e-tare, s. (French.) A person who lives in solitude; a recluse;
 Your conversation has spoiled me for a solitaire.—Pope.
 an ornament for the neck.

Before, a solitaire; behind,
 A twisted ribbon.—Shenstone.

SOLITARIAN, sol-e-ta're-an, s. A hermit.

SOLITARILY, sol'e-ta-re-le, ad. In solitude; alone; without company.

SOLITARINESS—SOLSTITIAL.

SOLITARINESS, sol'e-ta-re-nes, s. The state of being alone; retirement; solitude; loneliness.

SOLITARIUS, sol-e-ta're-us, s. (Latin, solitary; substantively, the hermit.) In Astronomy, an obscure constellation situated a little above Centaurus, near the tail of Hydra.

SOLITARY, sol'e-ta-re, a. Living alone; single; retired; remote from company; lonely; gloomy; dismal. In Botany, applied to peduncles when there is only one on the same plant, or when they stand singly in the same place; to seeds, when there is only one in a pericarp;—s. one who lives alone; a hermit.

SOLITAURILIA, sol-e-taw-ril'e-s, s. (Latin.) In Mythology, feasts instituted at Rome in honour of Mars, to whom was offered a bull, a ram, and a boar, after they had been led thrice round the army drawn up in battle array, in order to purify the soldiers by these sacrifices. They were also used on private occasions, and led round the ground, fields, &c. to preserve them from storms and tempests.

SOLITUDE, sol'e-tude, s. (solitudo, Lat.) Loneliness; a lonely life; a lonely place; a desert.

SOLIVA, so-l'i-va, s. (in honour of Salvador Soliva, a Spanish botanist and physician.) A genus of Composite plants: Suborder, Tubulifloræ.

SOLIVAGANT, sol-iv'a-gant, a. (solivagus, from solus, alone, and vagor, I wander, Lat.) Wandering alone.

SOLLAR, sol'lar, s. (from sol, the sun, Lat. its being nearest the sun.) A garret; an upper room.—Obsolete.

SOLLECITO, sol-le-se'to, a. (Italian, pensive.) In Music, a term denoting that the movement is to be performed in a mournful manner. It also means that the music is to be performed carefully.

SOLLYA, sol'le-a, s. (in honour of R. H. Solly, Esq.) A genus of plants: Family, Pittosporæ.

SOLMIZATION, sol-me-za'shun, s. (from Sol, Mi, &c.) In Music, a solfaing; a repetition of the notes of the gamut.

SOLO, so'lo, s. (Italian, alone.) In Music, a movement, or part of a movement, in which only one voice or instrument is employed.

SOLOMON'S SEAL.—See Polygonatum.

SOLORINA, so-lo-ri'na, s. (solos, solid, and rima, a skin, Gr. in allusion to the firm texture of the frond.) A genus of Lichens: Tribe, Idiothalamini.

SOLFUGIDÆ, sol-pu'je-de, s. A family of tracheal Arachnides, the species of which are usually covered with long hair or spines.

SOLSTICE, sol'etis, s. (solstitium, from sol, the sun, and sto, I stand, Lat.) The time at which the sun is at its greatest distance from the equator, and when its diurnal motion in declination ceases. This happens at midsummer and midwinter, or when the sun arrives at the tropic of Cancer and the tropic of Capricorn, the one being on the 21st of June, the longest day in the northern hemisphere, and the other on the 22d of December, the shortest day.

SOLSTITIAL, sol-stish'al, a. Pertaining to a solstice; happening at a solstice. Solstitial colure, a great circle of the globe, passing through the solstitial points, and intersecting the equinoctial colure at right angles in the poles of the world. Solstitial points, the first points of Cancer and Capricorn, being the points of the ecliptic at which the sun arrives at the time of the solstices.

SOLUBILITY—SOME.

SOLUBILITY, sol-u-bil'e-te, s. (from Solable.) The quality of being soluble.

SOLUBLE, sol'u-bl, a. (solubilis, from solvo, I melt, Lat.) Susceptible of being dissolved in a fluid; capable of solution.

SOLUBLENES, sol'u-bl-nes, s. Solubility.

SOLUTE, so-loot', a. (solutus, Lat.) In Botany, loose; not adhering; opposed to aduate. Bacon uses it in a general sense for loose; free; and also as a verb, to dissolve.

SOLUTION, so-lu'shun, s. (French, solutio, from solvo, I melt, loosen, or dissolve, Lat.) The act of separating the parts by means of a fluid; a dissolving; the result obtained by such process: thus, in dissolving salt in water, we obtain a solution of the salt, the term being applied both to the act of combination and to the result of the process; resolution of a doubt; explanation; release; discharge; deliverance. In Mathematics, the geometrical construction of a problem, or the algebraical expression of its conditions by an equation which gives the value of the unknown quantity. In Pathology, the termination of a disease. In Surgery, solution of continuity, a dissolving the unity and continuity of parts, as in wounds, fractures, &c.

SOLUTIVE, sol'u-tiv, a. Tending to dissolve; loosening taxation.

SOLVABILITY, sol-va-bil'e-te, } s. Ability to pay SOLVABLENESS, sol'va-bl-nes, } all just debts.

SOLVABLE, sol'va-bl, a. That may be solved, resolved, or explained; that can be paid.

SOLVE, solv, v. a. (solvo, Lat.) Properly, to loosen or separate the parts of anything—hence, to explain; to resolve; to unfold; to clear up; to remove; to dissipate, as to solve doubts. In Law, solvit ad diem (he paid on the day), a pleading by a debtor in an action of debt on bond, &c. to the effect that the money was paid at the day appointed.—Arch. Pract.

SOLVENCY, sol'ven-se, s. (solvens, Lat.) Ability to pay all just debts.

SOLVEND, sol'vend, s. A substance to be dissolved.

SOLVENT, sol'vent, s. A fluid in which a solid substance can be dissolved;—a. having the power of dissolving; able to pay all just debts; sufficient to pay all just debts.

SOLVER, sol'vur, s. One who solves or explains.

SOMATERIA, som-a-te're-a, s. A genus of the Fuliginæ, or Sea-ducks: Family, Anatidæ.

SOMATIC, so-mat'ik, } a. (somatikos, from soma, SOMATICAL, so-mat'e-kal, } a body, Gr.) Corporeal; pertaining to a body.

SPECIAL, spesh'al, a. (French, from specialis, Lat.) Noting a sort or species;

A special idea is called by the schools a species.—Watts. particular; peculiar; appropriate; designed for a particular circumstance, as special administration, special contract, special statute, &c. &c.; extraordinary; uncommon; chief in excellence;

The king hath drawn

—s. a particular.—Not used as a noun.

Promises of long life annexed to some specials of his services.—Hammond.

SPECIALIZE, spesh'al-ize, v. a. To mention specially; to particularize.—Not in use.

Our Saviour specializing and nominating the plagues.—Sheldon Mir. of Antioch. (1616.)

SPECIALLY, spesh'al-le, ad. Particularly; in a manner not common; peculiarly.

SPECIALTY, spesh'al-te, s. Particularity; a particular or peculiar case—(seldom used in the above senses.) Its common acceptation is, a special contract, obligation, or bond; any instrument under seal; a debt under such instrument is called a debt by specialty, in distinction from simple contract—hence, specialty creditor, one who has his debts secured to him by deed, and not by simple contract.

SPECIE, spe'she, s. (from the same root as Special) Gold and silver coin, in contradistinction to paper money; sort; kind; representation to the mind; appearance to the senses; show; visible representation; coin. In Pharmacy, a simple or component part of a compound medicine. In Law, in specie, applied to a contract, signifies specifically, strictly, or according to its specific terms.

Shows and species best serve with the common species.—Bacon.

SPECIES, spe'shiz, s. (specio, I see, Lat.) In Zoology and Botany, the term species is given to an individual, or number of individuals, constituting a genus. A male and female of the same genus may procreate, and the offspring is called a male or hybrid. Mules in the animal kingdom cannot procreate. Hybrids in the vegetable kingdom produce endless varieties, but not new species, the permanent propagation of which is limited to the individuals which constitute a species. In Mineralogy, species is determined by the form of the primitive crystal, or the ingredients of which a mineral is composed; thus we speak of galena as a species of lead ore.

SPECIFIC, spe-sif'ik, } a. (specific, Fr.) Con-SPECIFIC, spe-sif'e-kal, } stituting a species; that makes or characterizes a species: that is appropriated to the cure of a particular distemper.
Specific gravity, the relative weight of equal bulks of different kinds of matter. Distilled water is usually taken as the standard of comparison; and as a cubic foot of this fluid weighs 1000 ounces avoirdupois, the number, expressing the specific gravity of a body, indicates not only its relative weight with regard to an equal bulk of water, but also the absolute weight of a cubic foot of it, when the integer is taken at 1000 for the gravity of water: thus, 19258, the specific gravity of pure gold, is also the weight in avoirdupois ounces of a cubic foot of that metal. Specific heat, the capacity of different bodies for the reception of heat. Spe- cific name, the name which, appended to the name of a genus, constitutes the distinctive name of the species;—s. in Pharmacy, a specific is a medicine which exercises a certain and determinate influence on a particular disease.

SPECIFICALLY, spe-sif'e-kal-le, ad. In such a manner as to constitute a specific; according to the nature of the species.

SPECIFICATE, spe-sif'e-kate, v. a. (species and facio, I make, Lat.) To show, mark, or designate the species, or the distinguishing particulars of a thing; to specify.

SPECIFICATION, spes-e-fe-ka'shun, s. The act of determining by a mark or limit; notation of limits; the act of specifying or particularizing; mention or designation of particulars; article or thing specified. In Architecture, a description, at length, of the materials and workmanship to be used in the erection of a building.

SPECIFICNESS, spe-sif'ik-nes, s. Particular mark of distinction.

SPECIFY, spes'e-fi, v. a. (specifier, Fr.) To mention or name, as a particular thing; to designate in words.

SPECIMEN, spes'e-men, s. (Latin.) A part or small portion of anything, intended to exhibit the kind and quality of the whole, or of something not exhibited; a sample.

SPECIOUS, spe'shus, a. (specieux, Fr. speciosus, Lat.)
 Striking at first aspect; showy; superficially fair; plausible; not solidly, but apparently good or right.

SPECIOUSLY, spe'shus-le, ad. With a fair appearance; with show of right.

SPECIOUSNESS, spe'shus-nes, s. The state or quality of being specious.

SPECK, spek, s. (specca, Sax. spikkel, Dutch.) A stain; a small spot: a very minute object;—v. a.
 to spot; to stain in spots or drops.

 to mark with small spots of a different colour.

SPECKLED, spek'kld, part. a. Marked with specks; variegated with spots of a different colour from the ground or surface of the object.

SPECKLEDNESS, spek'kld-nes, s. The state of being speckled.

SPECTACLE, spek'ta-kl, s. (French, spectaculum, from spectro, I behold, Lat.) A show; anything exhibited to view as very remarkable; a gazing-stock; a sight.

SPECTACLED, spek'ta-kld, a. Furnished with spectacles.

SPECTACLES—SPECULATIVE.

SPECTACLES, spek'ta-klz, s. An optical instrument, consisting of two lenses set in a frame, and used for the purpose of assisting defective vision; figuratively, something that assists the intellectual sight.

Shakspeare needed not the spectacles of books to read nature.—Dryden.

SPECTACULAR, spek-tak'u-lar, a. Pertaining to shows.

SPECTION, spek-ta'shun, s. (spectatio, Lat.) Regard; respect.—Little used.

SPECTATOR, spek-ta'tur, s. (Latin.) An onlooker;
 a beholder; one who is personally present.

SPECTATORIAL, spek-ta-to're-al, a. Pertaining to a spectator.

SPECTATORSHIP, spek-ta'tur-ship, s. The act of beholding; the office or quality of a spectator.

SPECTATRESS, spek-ta'tres, } s. (spectatrix, Lat.) A SPECTATRIX, spek-ta'triks, } female spectator.

SPECTRE, spek'tur, s. (French, spectrum, from spectro, I behold, Lat.) An apparition; a ghost; something made preternaturally visible. Spectre-peopled, peopled with ghosts.

SPECTRUM, spek'trum, s. (Latin, an image.) A visible form. In Optics, an elongated image of the sun or other luminous body, formed on a wall or screen by a beam of undecomposed light, and refracted by a prism.—see Primary colours under Primary. Ocular spectrum, an image of a bright object, such as the sun, which continues for some time visible after closing and covering the eyes.
 In Entomology, a genus of Orthopterous insects:
 Family, Cursoria.

SPECULE, spek'u-le, s. (Latin.) In Roman Antiquity, tickets of wood, according to which the em-perors distributed their presents in the theatre, circus, &c.

SPECULAR, spek'u-lur, a. (specularis, from speculum, a mirror, Lat.) Having the qualities of a mirror; affording view; assisting sight. Specular iron, a mineral which occurs lamellar, and crystalized in many forms; fracture uneven; colour deep steel-grey, with a brilliant tarnish externally; internally it possesses a shining lustre. It is a pure peroxide of iron, in the proportion, according to Beudant, of iron, 69.34; oxygen, 30.66: sp. gr. 5.0 to 5.3; hardness = 5.5 to 6.5.

SPECULARIA, spek-u-la're-a, s. (from the ancient name of Speculum veneris.) A genus of plants: Order, Campanulacæ.

SPECULATE, spek'u-late, v. n. (speculor, I view, I contemplate, Lat.) To meditate; to contemplate; in a special sense, to lay out money with a view to more than usual success in trade;—v. a. to consider attentively.—Not used in this sense.

Speculate their nature with the eye of the understanding.—Brown.

SPECULATION, spek-u-la'shun, s. View or examination by the eye—(little used in this sense);
 Let us descend now, therefore, from this top Of speculation.—Milton.

mental view; contemplation; train of thoughts formed by meditation; mental scheme; theory; power of sight—(obsolete in this sense);
 Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
 Thou star'st with.—Shaks.

the act of speculating commercially.

SPECULATIST, spek'u-la-tist, s. A speculator.

SPECULATIVE, spek'u-la-tiv, a. Given to speculation; theoretical; pertaining to vision; prying.

SPECULATIVELY—SPEED.

SPECULATIVELY, spek'u-la-tiv-le, ad. In a speculative manner.

SPECULATIVENESS, spek'u-la-tiv-nes, s. The state of being speculative, or of consisting in speculation only.

SPECULATOR, spek'u-lay-tur, s. An observer; a spy; one who forms theories; one who speculates in commerce.

SPECULATORY, spek'u-lay-tur-e, a. Exercising speculation; intended or adapted for spying or viewing.

SPECULUM, spek'u-lum, s. (Latin, spiegel, Dutch and Germ.) A mirror or looking-glass; a glass that reflects the images of objects. In Optics, a reflector formed of polished metal, in distinction to one made of glass, to which the term mirror is usually applied. Speculum metal, an alloy of two parts of copper and one of tin, of which the reflectors of telescopes are usually made: a little arsenic is sometimes added to improve the whiteness of the compound. In Astrology, a table framed after the erection of the figure of a nativity, containing the planets and cusps, with their aspects and terms. In Surgery, an instrument for opening and obtaining a view of parts.

SPECUS, spe'kus, s. (Latin, a cave or den.) In ancient Architecture, the canal into which the water flowed in aqueducts raised above the surface of the ground. It was covered over with a vault to preserve the water from the sun, and to prevent its being mixed with rain water.

SPED, sped. Pret. and past part. of the verb to speed.

SPEECH, speetsh, s. (spac, Sax.) The faculty of uttering articulate sounds or words; of expressing ideas by words; language or words expressing ideas; a particular language; that which is spoken; mention; common saying; public discourse, oration, or harangue; any declaration of thought; I, with leave of speech implor'd, replied.—Milton.

—v. a. to harangue—(obsolete as a verb.) Speech-maker, one who is accustomed to make speeches in company.

SPEECHLESSNESS, speetsh'les-nes, s. The state of being speechless; muteness.

SPEED, speed, v. n. Pret. and past part. sped, speeded, (spedian, spadan, Sax. spaden, Dutch.) To make haste; to move with celerity; to have success; to prosper; to succeed, that is, to be successful in an enterprise; to have any condition, good or ill;

*Ships heretofore in seas like fishes sped,
The mightiest still upon the smallest fed.*—Dryden.

—v. a. to despatch; to send away in haste; to hasten; to hurry; to put in quick motion; to hasten to a conclusion; to execute; to help forward; to despatch, in the sense of to kill;

With a speeding thrust his heart he found.—Dryden.

A dire dilemma! either way I'm sped—

If foes they write, if friends they read me dead.—Pope.

swiftness; quickness; celerity; haste; despatch; rapid pace; success; prosperity in an undertaking. God-speed, probably more correctly good-

SPEEDFUL—SPENCE.

speed, god signifying good in the Anglo-Saxon; gude-speed is the form in the Scottish language, and seems to justify this opinion, as also the following passage of Scripture:—

O Lord God of my master Abraham, I pray thee send me good speed this day.—Gen. xxiv.

SPEEDFUL, speed'fúl, a. Full of speed; hasty.

SPEEDILY, speed'e-le, ad. Quickly; with haste.

SPEEDINESS, speed'e-nes, s. Quickness; celerity; despatch; haste.

SPEEDWELL, speed'wel, s. The common name of plants of the genus Veronica.

SPEEDY, speed'e, a. Quick; nimble; hasty; rapid in motion or performance.

SPEIGHT.—See Specht.

SPEISS, spise, s. A brittle, reddish alloy, composed chiefly of nickel and arsenic. It is a metallurgic production, obtained in forming smalt from the roasted ores of cobalt.

SPELK, spelk, s. (spele, Sax.) A splinter.—Obsolete or local.

SPELL, spel, s. (spel, or spell, a story; narration; saying; fame; report; a magic charm, or song. Sax.; hence, gospel, or godspell.) A tale or narration—(obsolete in this sense);

*Now hearken to my spell
Of battle and of chivalrie.*—Chaucer.

a charm, consisting of some words of occult power; a turn of labour; relief, particularly at sea, as, a spell at the pump, &c.;—v. a. to name the letters in a word; to write or print words with the proper characters; to take the place of another temporarily in any labour or service; to charm, as, spelled with words of occult power; to read; to discover by characters;

We are not left to spell out a God in the works of creation.—Smith.

(spellian, Sax.) to relate; to teach—(obsolete in this sense);

*Might I that holy legend find,
By fairies spell in mystic rhymes.*—Warton.

—v. n. to form words of letters; to read.

*Where I may sit and rightly spell,
Of every star that heaven doth show,
And every herb that sips the dew.*—Milton.

Spell-land, a land of spells or charms.

SPELLER, spel'ur, s. One who spells; one skilled in spelling.

SPELLING, spel'ing, s. The act of naming, writing, or printing the letters in words; orthography. Spelling-book, a book for teaching children in the earliest stages of reading.

SPELT, spelt. The preterite and past part. of to spell—colloquial;—v. a. (spalten, Germ. spälden, Dan.) to split—(obsolete in this sense);

Feed geese with oats, spelted beans, barley meal, or ground malt mixed with beer.—Mortimer.

—s. (spelte, Sax.) in Botany, the common name of the grass Triticum spelta, grown in Switzerland as wheat. The straw is almost solid; but the grain is light, and makes indifferent bread. It is also called German wheat.

SPELTER, spel'tur, s. (spiauter, Dutch and Germ.) The commercial term for zinc.

SPENCE, spens, s. (dépense, Fr.) A buttery; a larder—(obsolete.)

As betel in the spence.—Chaucer.

In Scotland, the interior or better room of a farmhouse.

SPENCER—SPERMATOZOA.

SPENCER, spen'sur, s. One who has the care of the spence or buttry—(obsolete in this sense); an outer coat or jacket without skirts.

SPEND, spend, v. a. Pret. and past part. spent, (spendan, Sax. spendera, Swed. expendo, Lat.) To lay out; to squander; to consume; to exhaust; to waste; to bestow for any purpose, often with on or upon: to exert; to fatigue;

Some spent with toil.—Dryden.

SPENDTHRIFT, spend'thrift, s. (spend and thrift) One who spends money profusely or improvidently; a prodigal; a lavish.

SPENNER, spen'er-a, s. (in honour of M. Spenner, a German botanist.) A genus of plants: Order, Melastomaceæ.

SPENT, spent, part. a. Exhausted of force or strength. Spent ball, a cannon or musket ball, which reaches an object without sufficient force to pass through it.

SPERABLE, spere'a-bl, a. (sperabilis, from spero, I hope, Lat.) That may be hoped.—Obsolete.

SPIRE, spere, v. a. (spyrion, Sax. spyrion, Icel.) To ask; to inquire.—Local.

SPIRGULA, sper'gu-la, s. (spergo, I scatter, Lat. because it scatters its seed abroad.) Spurry, a genus of plants: Order, Caryophyllaceæ.

SPIRGULARIA, sper-gu-la're-a, s. (altered from Spirgula,—which see.) A genus of plants: Order, Caryophyllaceæ.

SPIRGULASTRUM, sper-gu-las'trum, s. (spergula, the plant spurry, and astrum, a star, Lat.) A genus of plants, natives of North America.

SPIRM, sperm, s. (sperme, Fr. sperma, Lat. and Gr.) Animal seed; that by which the species is propagated; spawn of fishes or frogs; an oil obtained from the head of the Physeter macrocephalus, a species of whale found chiefly in the South Seas.

SPIRMACETI, sper-ma-se'te, s. (sperma, seed, and cetus, a whale, Lat.) The white substance obtained from the oil incorrectly called sperm. It is white, transparent, brittle, smooth, but not greasy, and it possesses a peculiar lustre. Fine candles are made of it. Sp. gr. 0.948.

SPIRMACOCK, sper-ma-ko'se, s. (sperma, a seed, and akoke, a point, Gr.) Button-weed, a genus of plants, natives of America: Order, Cinchonaceæ.

SPIRMADICTION, sper-ma-dik'te-on, s. (sperma, a seed, and diktyon, a net, Gr. on account of the manner in which the seeds cover the placenta.) A genus of plants, natives of the East Indies: Order, Cinchonaceæ.

SPIRMATIC, sper-mat'ik, } a. (from sperma, SPIRMATICAL, sper-mat'e-kal, } seed, Lat.) Consisting of seed; seminal; pertaining to the secretion or transmission of the seminal fluid, as spermatic veins, &c.

SPIRMATIZE, sper'ma-tize, v. n. To yield seed.—Not in use.

SPIRMATOCELE, sper-mat-o-se'le, s. (sperma, seed, and cele, a tumour, Gr.) In Pathology, a swelling of the spermatic vessels, or vessels of the testes.

SPIRMATOZOA, sper-mat-o-zo'a, s. (sperma, seed, and zoon, an animal, Gr.) Spermatic animalcula.

SPERMXYRUM—SPHACELLARIA.

SPERMXYRUM, sper-maks'e-rum, s. (sperma, seed, and axyra, an anchor, Gr. the umbilical follicle being in the form of an anchor.) A genus of Australian shrubs: Order, Olacaceæ.

SPIRMESTES, sper-mes'tis, s. (sperma, a seed, Gr.) A genus of birds, belonging to the Coccothraustineæ, or Hardbills, chiefly natives of India: Family, Fringillidæ.

SPIRMIDIUM, sper-mid'e-um, s. (sperma, a seed, Gr.) In Botany, a kind of small seed-vessel, resembling a seed. It is also called achanium,—which see.

SPIRMODERM, sper'mo-derm, s. (sperma, seed, and derma, a skin, Gr.) In Botany, the whole integuments of a seed in the aggregate.

SPIRMOIDEA, sper-mo-id'e-a, s. (sperma, seed, and eidos, resemblance, Gr.) A name given by Fries to a certain altered form of the seeds of rye and other grasses, and to which the name ergot and spurred-grain has been commonly applied.

SPIRMOLOGIST, sper-mol'o-jist, s. (sperma, seed, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) One who treats of seeds—hence, a botanist.

SPIRMOPHAGA, sper-mof-a-ga, s. (sperma, seed, and phago, I eat, Gr.) A genus of finches, belonging to the Coccothraustineæ, or Hardbills: Family, Fringillidæ.

SPIRMOPHILA, sper-mof'e-la, s. (sperma, seed, and phileo, I love, Gr.) A genus of birds, allied to the Bullfinches, natives of America: Family, Fringillidæ.

SPIRMOPHILUS, sper-o-mof'e-lus, s. A genus of Rodents, allied to the Marinots.

SPIRMOSPIZA, sper-mo-spi'za, s. (sperma, seed, and spizo, I chirp, Gr.) A genus of birds, belonging to the Coccothraustineæ, or Hardbills: Family, Fringillidæ.

SPIRSE, spers, v. a. To disperse.—Not used.

The wrathful wind—

That spers'd those clouds.—Spenser.

SPIET, spet, v. a. To spit;

The dragon womb

Of Stygian darkness spets her thickest gloom,
And makes one blot of all the air.—Milton.

—s. spittle.—Obsolete in both senses.

SPIEW, spu, v. a. (spicam, Sax. spuacen, Dutch.) To vomit; to eject from the stomach; to eject; to cast out with loathing;—v. n. to vomit; to discharge the contents of the stomach.

SPIEWER, spu'ur, s. One who spews.

SPIEWING, spu'ing, s. The act of vomiting.

SPIEWY, spu'e, a. Wet; boggy.—Local.

SPIHACEL, sfas'el, } s. (sphakelos, Gr. sphace- SPIHACELUS, sfas'e-lus, } lus, Lat.) In Pathology, deep mortification; a deep-seated gangrene of a limb or organ; the death of a bone.

SPIHACELATE, sfas'e-late, v. n. To mortify; to become gangrenous, as flesh; to decay or become carious, as bone;—v. a. to affect with gangrene.

SPIHACELATE, sfas'e-late, } a. Attacked by SPIHACELATED, sfas'e-lay-ted, } sphacel; mortified.

SPIHACELATION, sfas-e-lu'shun, s. The process of becoming or making gangrenous; mortification.

SPIHACELE, sfas'e-le, s. (sphakos, sage, from its similarity to plants of that name.) A genus of plants: Order, Lamiaceæ.

SPIHACELLARIA, sfa-sel-la're-a, s. (sphakelos, mortification, from the appearance of the truncated extremities of the shoots, in which the reproductive - organs are situated.) A genus of Algae: Order, Confervaceae.

- SPHENODESME, sfe-no-des'me, s. (sphen, a wedge, and desme, a fascicle, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Verbenaceae.
- SPHENOGYNE, sfe-noj'e-ne, s. (sphen, a wedge, and gyne, a female, Gr. in allusion to the wedge-shaped stigmas.) A genus of small, annual, composite, flowery plants: Suborder, Tubuliflorae.
- SPHÆRA, sfæ'ra, s. (sphaira, a sphere, Gr.) A genus of fossil bivalves, found in the cretaceous system of Kent.
- SPHÆRALACEA, sfe-ra-la'se-n, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and akis, a rent, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Malvaceae.
- SPHÆREDA, sfe-re'da, s. (sphaira, a sphere, Gr.) A fossil plant, from the Coal formation of the Yorkshire coast.
- SPHÆRIA, sfæ're-a, s. (sphaira, a sphere, Gr.) A genus of Fungi: Tribe, Gasteromycetes.
- SPHÆRIDIDIUM, sfe-rid'e-um, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and eidol, likeness, Gr.) A genus of lamellicorn Coleopterous insects: Family, Hydrophyllidae.
- SPHÆRIODACTYLUS, sfe-re-o-dak'te-lus, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and daktylos, a digit, Gr. from the toes being subcylindrical) A genus of lizards: Family, Iguanidae.
- SPHÆRISTERIUM, sfe-ris-te're-um, s. (Latin.) In ancient Architecture, a circular court for playing tennis and other exercises.
- SPHÆRITES, sfe-r'i'tes, s. (sphaira, a sphere, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Silphidae.
- SPHÆROBOLUS, sfe-rob'o-lus, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and bollos, I throw, Gr.) A genus of Fungi: Tribe, Gasteromycetes.
- SPHÆROCARPUS, sfe-ro-kār'pus, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and karpus, a seed, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Hepaticae.
- SPHÆROCARYA, sfe-ro-kar'e-a, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and karyon, a nut, Gr. the nuts being round.) A genus of plants, natives of Nepal: Order, Rhamnaceae.
- SPHÆROCERA, sfe-ro'se-ra, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and keras, a horn or antenna, Gr.) A genus of Dipterous insects: Family, Muscidae.
- SPHÆROCCITES, sfe-ro-kok-si'tes, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and kokkos, a nut, Gr.) A genus of fossil Fuci, found in the Oolite of Yorkshire.
- SPHÆROCOCCUS, sfe-ro-kok'kus, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and kokkos, fruit, Gr.) A genus of Algae: Order, Ceramiales.
- SPHÆROCORIS, sfe-rok'o-ris, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and kore, a doll, Gr.) A genus of Hemipterous insects: Family, Pentomidae.
- SPHÆRODERUS, sfe-rod'er-us, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and dere, the neck, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Carabidae.
- SPHÆRODUS, sfæ-ro-dus, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and odous, a tooth, Gr.) A genus of fossil fishes, found in the Chalk and Oolite systems.
- SPHÆROIDINA, sfe-roy-di'na, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and eidol, likeness, Gr.) A genus of Foraminiferous Mollusca.
- SPHÆROLOBUM, sfe-ro-lo'be-um, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and lobos, a pod, Gr. in allusion to the round legumes.) A genus of Leguminous plants, natives of Australia: Suborder, Papilionaceae.
- SPHÆROMA, sfe-ro'ma, s. (sphaira, a sphere, Gr.) A genus of Crustaceans: Order, Isopoda. In Pathology, a fleshy, globular protuberance.

SPHÆRONITES—SPHÆCIDÆ.

- SPHÆRONITES, sfe-ro-ni'tes, s. (sphaira, a sphere, Gr.) A group of fossil Echinodermata, found in the Silurian and Devonian strata.
- SPHÆROPHORON, sfe-rof'o-ron, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and phoreo, I bear, Gr.) A genus of Lichens: Tribe, Cænothalamii.
- SPHÆROPHYSA, sfe-ro-fi'za, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and physa, a bladder, Gr. in reference to the shape of the legumes.) A genus of Leguminous plants: Suborder, Papilionaceae.
- SPHÆROSIDERITE, sfe-ro-sid'er-ite, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and sideros, iron, Gr.) A spheroidal and radiated variety of sphatose iron from Hanan.
- SPHÆROSTEMA, sfe-ro-ste'ma, s. (sphaira, a globe, and stema, a stigma, Gr.) A genus of plants, natives of Nepal: Order, Anonaceae.
- SPHÆROSTEMMA, sfe-ro-stem'ma, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and stemma, a crown, Gr. the stamens being seated on a globose disk.) A genus of plants, consisting of climbing shrubs, natives of Java: Order, Schizandraceae.
- SPHÆROSTIGMA, sfe-ro-stig'ma, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and stigma, a spot, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Onagraceae.
- SPHÆROTHECA, sfe-ro-the'ka, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and theke, a case or sheath, Gr. in reference to the globular capsule.) A genus of plants: Order, Scrophulariaceae.
- SPHÆROTUS, sfe-ro'tus, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and ous, otos, the ear, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Stenelytra.
- SPHÆRULACEA, sfe-ru-la'se-a, s. (see Sphæralacea.) A family, in the arrangement of Blainville, of Foraminifera, comprising the genera Miliola, Melenia, Saracenaria, and Textularia. Lamarck uses the term for his fourth family of Cephalopoda.
- SPHÆRULITE, sfæ'ru-lite, s. (sphaira, a sphere, and lithos, a stone, Gr.) A mineral which occurs in small botryoidal and spheroidal masses: structure compact, fibrous; fracture conchoidal; colour grey, brown, red, yellow, of various shades; opaque; translucent on the edges; brittle. Composition—silica, 79.12; alumina, 12.00; potash and soda, 3.58; magnesia, 1.10; oxide of iron, 2.45; water, 1.75: sp. gr. 2.4 to 2.54; hardness = 7 to 7.5.
- SPHÆRULITES, sfe-ru-li'tes, s. (sphaira, a sphere, Gr.) A genus of Mollusca, belonging to the Rudista of Lamarck, the shells of which have the valves roughened by irregularly-raised plates: Family, Ostracea.
- SPHAGEBRANCHUS, sfa-je-brang'kus, s. (sphage, the throat, and branchia, gills, Gr.) A genus of fishes: Family, Sybranchidae.
- SPHAGNOUS, sfag'nus, a. Mossy; containing peat-moss.—See Sphagnum.
- SPHAGNUM, sfag'nun, s. (a name given by Pliny to designate some kind of moss which grew on trees.) A genus of moss plants which contribute largely to the growth of peat. The species grow in watery situations.
- SPHALLEROCARPUS, sfal-ler-o-kār'pus, s. (sphallo, I deceive, and karpus, a seed, Gr. from the fruit being liable to be taken for cumin seed.) A genus of Umbelliferous plants: Suborder, Campylospermae.
- SPHÆCIDÆ, sfæ'se-de, s. (sphex, one of the genera.) A family of Hymenopterous insects, distinguished by a pedunculated abdomen, which is frequently of great length and very slender: they prey upon spiders and caterpillars.

SPHECODES—SPHERE.

SPHECODES, sfo-kó'dis, s. (sphcodes, wasp-like, Gr.) A genus of parasitical Hymenopterous insects: Family, Andrenidae.

SPHECOMYIA, sfo-ko-mí'e-a, s. (sphex, sphexos, a wasp, and myia, a fly, Gr.) A genus of Dipterous insects: Family, Athericera.

SPHECOTHERES, sfo-ko-thé'ris, s. (sphex, a wasp, and therao, I hunt, Gr.) A genus of birds, natives of Australia.

SPHENANDRA, sfo-nan'dra, s. (sphen, a wedge, and aner, andros, a male, Gr. in allusion to the wedge-shaped anthers.) A genus of plants, natives of the Cape of Good Hope: Order, Scrophulariaceae.

SPHENE, sfene, s. (sphen, a wedge, Gr.) A mineral of a foliated texture, and vitreous or adamantine lustre; colour, various shades of grey, green, yellow, and brown: it is found interspersed in primary rocks, as in granite and gneiss, and more particularly in cyanite. The results of the analysis of sphene vary considerably: the following is by Klaproth:—titanic acid, 33; silicic acid, 35; lime, 33: sp. gr. 3.468 to 3.6.

SPHENISCUS, sfo-nis'kus, s. (spheniskos, a dim. of sphen, a wedge, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Stenelytra.

SPHENOCANTHUS, sfo-no-kan'thus, s. (sphen, a wedge, and kantha, a spine, Gr.) A genus of fossil fishes found in the Coal formation of Scotland.

SPHENOID, sfo-noy'd, } a. (sphen, a wedge, and eidos, likeness, Gr.) Wedge-like, applied in Anatomy to a bone of the skull, which wedges in and locks together most of the other bones. Spheno-basilar, relating to the sphenoid and occipital bones. Spheno-maxillary, relating to the sphenoid and maxillary bones. Spheno-palatine, relating to the sphenoid and palate bones. Spheno-parietal, relating to the sphenoid and parietal bones. Spheno-temporal, relating to the sphenoid and temporal bones.

SPHENONCHUS, sfo-nong'kus, s. (sphen, a wedge, and onchos, a barb, Gr.) A genus of fishes from the Lias and Wealden strata of England.

SPHENOPHYLLUM, sfo-no-fil'lum, s. (sphen, a wedge, and phyllon, a leaf, Gr.) A genus of Dicotyledonous fossil plants, with deeply furrowed branches; leaves verticillate, wedge-shaped, and having dichotomous veins.

SPHENOPTERIS, sfo-nop'ter-is, s. (sphen, a wedge, and pteris, a fern, Gr. from the wedge-shaped nature of the leaves.) A genus of fossil plants found in the Coal formation: Order, Filices.

SPHENOTOMA, sfo-not'o-ma, s. (sphenoo, I cleave, and tome, a section, Gr. in reference to the deep divided limb of the corolla.) A genus of plants, natives of New Holland: Order, Epacridaceae.

SPHENURUS, sfo-nu'rús, s. (sphen, a wedge, and oura, a tail, Gr.) A genus of birds of the pigeon kind: Family, Columbidae.

SPHERE, sfere, s. (French, sphaera, Lat. sphaera, Gr. sfera, Ital.) In Geometry, a solid body described by the revolution of a semicircle about its diameter, or a solid contained under one surface, which in every part is equally distant from a point within it, called the centre; an orb or globe of the mundane system;

First the sun, a mighty sphere, he framed,— Milton.

an orbicular body; a globe; a representation of the earth on the surface of a globe, which has also represented on it an assemblage of circles, showing the positions of the equator, ecliptic, meridians, &c.: when the poles are in the horizon, it is called a right sphere; when the poles are in the zenith and nadir, a parallel sphere; and in every other position, an oblique sphere; the concave expanse of the heavens, which, having no definite limit, appears to the eye as the interior surface of a sphere; circuit of action, knowledge, or influence; compass; province; employment; rank; order of society. Armillary sphere, an artificial representation of the circles of the sphere by means of brass rings. Sphere of activity, the whole space or extent reached by the active powers of a person or thing. Projection of the sphere,—see under Projection;—v. a. to place in a sphere—(unusual in this sense);

SPHERICAL—SPHEROSTILBITE.

The glorious planet Sol
In noble eminence enthron'd, and spher'd
Amidst the rest.—Shaks.

to form into roundness. Sphere-born, born among the spheres. Sphere-descended, descended from the spheres. Sphere-melody, melody of the spheres. Sphere-music, the music or harmony of the spheres.

SPHERIC, sfer'ik, } a. Globular; orbicular;
SPHERICAL, sfer'e-kal, } planetary. Spherical Geometry, that branch of geometry which treats of spherical magnitudes. Spherical Trigonometry, that branch of trigonometry which teaches how to compute the sides and angles of spherical triangles. Spherical angle, an angle formed on the surface of a sphere by the intersection of two great circles, or circles whose planes pass through the centre. Spherical excess, the sum by which the three angles of a spherical triangle exceeds two right angles. Spherical triangle, a triangle formed by the intersection of three such circles.

SPHERICALLY, sfer'e-kal-le, ad. In the form of a sphere.

SPHERICALNESS, sfer'e-kal-nes, } s. The state or SPHERICITY, sfer-is'e-te, } quality of being orbicular; roundness.

SPHERICLE, sfer'e-kl, s. A small sphere.

SPHERICS, sfer'iks, s. The doctrine of the sphere and spheroid.

SPHEROID, sfo-royd', s. (sphaira, a globe, and eidos, likeness, Gr.) A solid approaching the figure of a sphere, produced by the revolution of a semi-ellipse about its axis: when it is produced by the revolution of the ellipse about its transverse or longest diameter, it is called an oblong spheroid; when about its conjugate or shortest diameter, a prolate spheroid.

SPHEROIDAL, sfo-royd'al, } a. Having the SPHEROIDIC, sfo-royd'ik, } form of a spheroid.
SPHEROIDICAL, sfo-royd'e-kal, } roid. In Crystallography, bounded by several convex faces. In Architecture, spheroidal bracketing, bracketing formed to receive the plastering of a conoid.

SPHEROIDITY, sfo-royd'e-te, s. The state or quality of being spheroidal.

SPHEROMETER, sfo-rom'e-tur, s. (sphaira, a globe, and metron, a measure, Gr.) An instrument for ascertaining the precise thickness of small bodies, the curvature of optical glasses, &c.

SPHEROSIDERITE.—See Sphaerosiderite.

SPHEROSTILBITE, sfo-ro-stil bite, s. (sphere and stilbite.) A mineral which occurs in globular masses, which present a radiated structure, a pearly lustre, and a brilliant fracture; the fibres are flexible, and the surfaces of the globules may be scratched by the nail. Composition—soda, 0.68; silica, 55.91; alumina, 16.61; lime, 9.03; water, 17.84; sp. gr. 2.31; hardness, above 3.0.

SPHERULE—SPICCATO

SPHERULE, sfer'ule, s. (sphærule, Lat.) A little globe or sphere; a minute spherical body.

SPHERULITE, sfer'u-lite, s. (sphaira, a globe, and lithos, a stone, Gr.) A variety of obsidian, of various shades of brown and grey: it occurs embedded in spheroidal masses; fracture conchoidal; translucent on the edges; opaque; brittle: sp. gr. 2.416 to 2.452; hardness = 7.25.—Thomson.

SPHERY, sfer'e, a. Belonging to the spheres.

Love virtue —
She can teach you how to climb
Higher than the sphery chime.—Milton.

SPHEX, sfeks, s. A genus of Hymenopterous insects: Type of the family Sphecidae.

SPHIGMOMETER, sfig-mom'e-tur, s. (sphigmos, the pulse, and metron, a measure, Gr.) An instrument for counting the arterial pulsations.

SPHINCTER, sfing'k'tur, s. (sphincter, I close, Gr.) In Anatomy, a general name for any muscle whose function consists in closing the natural orifice which it surrounds.

SPHINX, sfingks, s. (Greek and Latin.) In Antiquity, a fabled monster, half woman and half lion, said by the Greek poets to have infested the city of Thebes, devouring its inhabitants, till such time as a riddle it had proposed to them should be solved. In Entomology, the Hawk-moths, a genus of Lepidopterous insects: Type of the tribe Sphingides.

SPHRAGID, sfraj'id, s. A kind of ocherous earth, which falls to pieces in water with the emission of many bubbles: it is also called earth of Lemnos.

SPHRAGISTÆ, sfraj-is'te, s. (sphragis, a seal, Gr.) An order of Egyptian priests, whose office was to stamp the sacred seal on the bullock previous to sacrifice.

SPHRAGISTICS, sfraj-is'tiks, s. (sphragis, a seal, Gr.) The science of seals, describing their history, peculiarities, and distinctions, especially with a view to the means which they afford of ascertaining the age and genuineness of the documents to which they are affixed.

SPHYGMIC, sfig'mik, a. (sphygmos, the pulse, Gr.) Pertaining to the pulse, or to the knowledge or doctrine of the pulse.

SPHYRENA, sfi-re'na, s. (sphyraina, the Greek name of the hammer-fish.) A genus of fishes: Family, Percidae.

SPHYRÆNODUS, sfi-re'no-dus, s. (sphyræ, a hammer, and odus, a tooth, Gr.) A genus of fossil fishes from the London clay.

SPIAL, spi'al, s. A spy; a scout.—Obsolete.

The privy spials placed in all his way.—Spenser.

SPICA, spi'ka, s. (spica, an ear of corn, Lat. from the similarity of the leaves to an ear of wheat.) A genus of plants: Order, Lamiaceæ. In Surgery, a bandage, so called from its turns being thought to resemble the rows of an ear of corn. In Astronomy, Spica virginis, a bright fixed star of the first magnitude, in the ear of corn in the constellation Virgo.

SPICATE, spi'kate, a. Eared like corn; having spikes.

SPICCATO, spik-kat'o, s. (Italian, divided.) In Music, a term indicating that every note is to have its distinct sound. When used in relation to instruments played with a bow, it is to be understood that every note is to have a bow distinct from the preceding or succeeding one.

SPICE, spise, s. (epice, Fr. specie, Ital. especia, Span.) A vegetable production, fragrant to the smell and pungent to the taste, used in sauces and in cookery; a small quantity; sample or specimen;

Thy by-gone fooleries are but spices of it.—Shaks.

—v. a. to season with spice; to mix with aromatic substances, as, to spice wine; to render nice; to season with scruples.

You have such a spiced consideration,

Such qualms upon your worship's conscience.—

Beau. and Flea.

SPICER, spi'sur, s. One who deals in spice.

SPICERY, spi'ser-e, s. (epicerie, Fr.) Spices in general; a repository of spices or doubts.

SPICINESS, spi'se-nes, s. The quality of being spicy.

SPICK, spik, a. A word only used in the phrase, spick and span new; that is, quite new; now first used.

SPICOSITY, spi-kos'e-te, s. (spica, a spike, Lat.) The state of being full of ears, like corn.

SPICULAR, spik'u-lar, a. (spiculum, a dart, Lat.) Resembling a dart; having sharp points.

SPICULATE, spik'u-late, v. a. (spica, a spike, Lat.) To make sharp at the points.

SPICULE, spik'ule, s. A spikelet or little spike; applied to grasses that have many florets on one calyx.

SPICY, spi'se, a. Producing spice; abounding with spice; having the qualities of spice; fragrant; aromatic.

SPIDER, spi'dur, s. (probably from Spinner.) An animal belonging to the family Araneidae, characterized by its spinning a web or thread for the purpose of catching flies, on which it preys. Spider-catcher, the bird Picus mararius. Spider-ophrys, the plant Ophrys arenifera.

SPIDERLIKE, spi'der-like, a. Resembling a spider.

SPIDERWORT, spi'der-wurt, s. The common name of plants of the genus Tradescantia.

SPIELMANNIA, speel-man'ne-a, s. (in honour of Prof. Spielmann of Strasburg.) A genus of plants, natives of the Cape of Good Hope: Order, Verbenaceæ.

SPIGELIA, spi-je'le-a, s. (in honour of Adrian Spigelius, born at Brussels, 1578, professor of anatomy and surgery at Padua.) A genus of plants: Type of the order Spigeliaceæ.

SPIGELIACEÆ, spi-je-le-a'se-e, s. (spigelia, one of the genera.) A natural order of Exogenous plants, consisting of shrubs or subshrubs, with opposite stipulate leaves, and regular flowers in equal parts; calyx free, and irregularly five-parted; stamens five, arising from the corolla; style inserted in the top of the ovary; stigma simple; seeds small.

SPIGNEL, spign'el, s. The plant Athamanta Macedonica, used in some parts of the East in scenting clothes,—written sometimes spicknel.

SPIGOT, spig'ot, s. A pin or peg put into a hole in a cask of liquor.

SPIKE, spike, s. (spica, Lat.) A long piece of iron or wood, sharp at the point; a species of lavender. In Botany, a form of inflorescence in which all the flowers are sessile along a common axis, as in Plantago; an ear of corn. Spike-rush, a plant of the genus Eleocharis: Order, Cyperaceæ;—v. a. to fasten with long nails; to set with spikes; to stop the vent with spikes, as, to spike cannon.

SPIKENARD—SPINDLE.

SPIKENARD, spi-ke'nård, s. (spica nardi, Lat.) The common name of the plants belonging to the genus Nardostachys.

SPIKY, spi'ke, a. Having a sharp point.

SPILANTHES, spi-lan'this, s. (spilos, a spot, and anthos, a flower, Gr. in allusion to the heads of the original species, which are yellow with a brown disk.) A genus of Composite plants: Suborder, Tubulifloræ.

SPILL, spil, } s. (spil, a pivot, Dutch.) A small SPILE, spile, } peg or wooden pin; a stake driven into the ground; a little sum of money—(not used in this sense);—v. a. (spillan, Sax. spillen, Germ.) to suffer to fall or run out of a vessel; to suffer to be shed; to cause to flow out or lose, as, to spill blood; to waste or destroy—(obsolete in this sense);

Crack nature's mould, all germs spill at once,
That make ungrateful man.—Shaks.

to throw away; among seamen, to discharge the wind out of the cavity or belly of a sail;—v. n. to waste; to be lavish; to be shed; to be lost by being shed.

SPILLER, spil'lur, s. One who spills or sheds; a kind of fishing-line.

SPILLING, spill'ing, a. Spilling lines, in Navigation, ropes for furling more conveniently the square sails.

SPILOMA, spi-lo'ma, s. (Greek, a spot.) A genus of Lichens: Tribe, Idiothalamii.

SPILT, spilt, Pret. and past part. of the verb to spill.

SPILTH, spilth, s. (from Spill.) Anything poured out or wasted.

SPILOS, spi'lus, s. (spilos, a spot, Gr.) In Pathology, a congenital spot, appearing to consist of a partial thickening of the rete mucosum.

SPIN, spin, v. a. Pret. spun or span, past part. spun, (spinnan, Sax. spinnen, Germ.) To draw out and twist into threads, either by the hand or a machine; to draw out tediously: to form by a slow process, or by degrees; to protract; to give a rotatory motion to, as a top; to draw out a filament from the body, as the spider or silkworm; to spin hay, to make ropes of it;—v. n. to practise spinning; to move round rapidly; to whirl; to issue, as a small current.

The blood out of their helmets span.—Drayton.

SPINA BIFIDA, spi'na be-fi'da, s. (bis, twice, and findo, I cleave, Lat.) A disease attended with an incomplete state of some of the vertebrae, and a fluid swelling, commonly situated over the lower lumbar vertebrae. The name is also given to an analogous tumour, sometimes occurring on children's heads, attended with an imperfect ossification of a part of the cranium. Spina ventosa, a name now commonly employed to designate the disease called white swelling.

SPINACH, spi'nak, } s. (spinacia, Lat. spinace, Ital.
SPINAGE, spin'aje, } spinach, Pers.) A plant of the genus Spinacia.

SPINACIA, spi-na'she-a, s. (spina, a prick, Lat. on account of the process of the seed.) Spinage, a genus of annual plants: Order, Chenopodiaceæ.

SPINAL, spi'nal, a. Pertaining to the spine or backbone, as the spinal cord. Spinal marrow,—see Medulla.

SPINDLE, spin'dl, s. (from Spin; spindel, Sax. and Dan.) The instrument used for twisting thread;

SPINE—SPINOSISM.

a slender pointed rod on which anything turns; the lower end of a capstan shal with iron. In Geometry, the solid generated by the revolution of a curve line about its base or double ordinate. In Mechanics, the axis of a wheel or roller. In Botany, a long slender stalk—(obsolete in this sense.) Spindle-legs, or spindle-shank, a tall, slender person, in contempt. Spindle-shanked, having long slender legs. Spindle-shaped, having the shape of a spindle; fusiform. Spindle-tree, the common name of the plant Euonymus europæa, and other species belonging to the same genus;—v. n. to shoot or grow into a long slender stalk or body.—Obsolete in this sense.

When the flower begins to spindle.—Mortimer.

SPINE, spine, s. (spina, Lat.) The back-bone of an animal; a thorn; the prickly ray of the fin of a fish.

SPINEL, spi'nel, } s. (spinelle, Fr. spinella, Ital.)
SPINELLE, spi-nel', } A mineral exhibiting various shades of red, violet, or yellow, and sometimes, though rarely, black; structure lamellar, but not very distinctly so; fracture flat, conchoidal, with a splendid vitreous lustre. It is a variety of the ruby. Composition of the red spinel—alumina, 74.50; magnesia, 8.25; silica, 15.50; lime, 0.75; protoxide of iron, 1.50: sp. gr. 3.5; hardness = 8.0.

SPINELLANE, spi-nel'lane, s. A mineral which bears a considerable analogy to sodalite. Its crystalline form is the rhomboidal dodecahedron, sometimes elongated into six-sided prisms with triedral terminations; colour generally ash-grey; crystals small and translucent; it scratches glass, but is brittle. Composition, according to Klaproth—soda, 19.0; silica, 43.0; alumina, 29.5; lime, 1.5; oxide of iron, 2.0; sulphuric acid, 1.0; water, 2.5: sp. gr. 2.28.

SPINESCENT, spi-nes'sent, a. (from Spine.) Becoming hard and thorny.

SPINET, spin'et, s. (spinetta, Ital.) A musical instrument, with a key-board, &c., similar in construction to a harpsichord. It had but one string to each note. The outline of its ordinary form was that of a harp laid horizontally, supposing the key-board to be placed on the outside of the trunk, or sounding part of the last-named instrument.

SPINET, spi'net, s. A small wood or place where thorns and briars grow.—Not used.

A satyr lodged in a little spinet, who advanced his head above the top of the wood, &c.—Ben Jonson.

SPINIFEROUS, spi-nif'er-us, a. (spina, a spine, and fero, I bear, Lat.) Producing spines; bearing thorns.

SPINK, spink, s. The Chaffinch, or Fringilla cœlebs of ornithologists.

The spink chaunts sweetest in a hedge of thorns.—Harte.

SPINNER, spin'nur, s. One who spins; a spider.

SPINNING, spin'ing, s. The act, practice, or art of drawing out, and twisting into threads, as wool, flax, or cotton. Spinning-jenny, or spinning-genie, a machine for spinning cotton, long since superseded by the mule. It was invented about 1767, by James Hargreaves, a weaver, who resided near Blackburn in Lancashire. Spinning-wheel, a wheel for spinning wool, flax, or cotton into threads.

SPINOSISM, } spin'o-zizm, s. The system of philoby Benedict Spinoza of Amsterdam. In it he deduces mathematically, from a few axioms, that 'there can be no substance but God; whatever is, is in God; and nothing can be conceived without God,'—hence, his system is styled Pantheistic.

SPINOSIST, } spin-o'-zist, s. A believer in the doctrines of Spinoza.

SPINOZIST, } trines of Spinoza.

SPINOSITY, spi-nos'e-te, s. (from Spine.) The state of being thorny or spiny; crabbedness.

SPINOUS, spi'nus, a. (spinous, from spina, a spine, Lat.) Full of spines; armed with spines; thorny.

SPINSTER, spin'stur, s. (from Spin.) A woman who spins. In Law, the usual name for a girl or maiden.

SPINSTRY, spin'stre, s. The business of spinning.

SPINTHERE, spin'there, s. A name given by Haüy to a mineral of a greenish-grey colour, found in the department of the Isère in France.

SPINY, spi'ne, a. (from Spine.) Full of spines; thorny; perplexed; difficult; troublesome.

SPIO, spi'o, s. A genus of Annelides: Order, Dorsibranchiata.

SPIRACEÆ, spi-ra'se-e, s. (spiræa, one of the genera.) An order of Exogenous plants, composed of herbs or shrubs, with simple trifoliate or pinnate leaves; calyx five-cleft; petals five; perigynous and equal; stamens twenty to fifty, arising from the calyx or the disc; anthers innate, two-celled, and bursting lengthwise; ovaries superior, and free from the calyx.

SPIRACLE, spi-ra'-kl, s. (spiraculum, from spiro, I breathe, Lat.) A small aperture in animal and vegetable bodies, by which air or other fluid is exhaled or inhaled; a small orifice or vent; a pore; a minute passage; any small aperture or vent.

SPIRADICLIS, spi-ra-dik'lis, s. (speira, a spire, and diklis, folding-doors with valves, Gr. in allusion to the valves being divided into two parts, and also being twisted at the apex.) A genus of plants: Order, Cinchonaceæ.

SPIRÆA, spi-re'a, s. (said to be from speirao, I become spiral, Gr. in allusion to the fitness of the plants to be twisted into garlands.) A genus of plants: Type of the natural order Spiracææ.

SPIRAL, spi'ral, a. (from spira, a spire, Lat.) Circularly involved like a screw; winding:—s. in Geometry, the name given to a class of curves distinguished by the general property of continually receding from a centre or pole, while they continue to revolve about it. Spirals receive different names from the properties which characterize them, or from the names of their discoverers; as, the equable spiral, the hyperbolic spiral, the logarithmic spiral, the spiral of Cotes, &c. Spiral pump, another name for the screw of Archimedes. In Botany, spiral vessels, membranous tubes lined with an elastic fibre, twisted spirally. Their function is that of the conveyance of air.

SPIRALEPIS, spi-ra'le-pis, s. (speira, a spire, and lepis, a scale, Gr.) A genus of Composite plants: Suborder, Tubulifloræ.

SPIRALLY, spi'ral-le, ad. In a spiral form or direction; in the manner of a screw.

SPIRATION, spi-ra'shun, s. (spiratio, Lat.) A breathing.—Not used.

God did, by a kind of spiration, produce them.—Barrow.

SPIRE, spire, s. (spira, Lat. speira, Gr.) A winding like that of a screw; a body that shoots up to a point; a tapering body; the top or uttermost point.

The spire and top of praises.—Shaks.

SPIRED—SPIRITOUSNESS.

In Architecture, a steeple which diminishes as it ascends, either pyramidally or conically. In ancient Architecture, the base of a column, and sometimes the astragal or torus of the base;—v. n. to shoot up as a spire; to sprout, as grain in malting; to breathe—(not used in this sense);—v. a. to shoot forth.—Obsolete in this sense.

The spiring turrets glitter through the skies.—Shenstone.

In lady's brests, and bounteous race
Of womankind, it, fayrest flower, doth spire,
And beareth fruit of honour and all chaste desire.—Spenser.

SPIRITUAL—SPIROPTERA.

SPIRITUAL, spir'it-u-al, a. (spirituel, Fr. spiritualis, Lat.) Having or partaking the nature of a spirit; existing imperceptibly to the organs of sense; mental; intellectual; separated from the things of sense; in a special application, ecclesiastical; not lay or temporal; pure; holy; pertaining to divine things.

SPIRITUALISM, spir'it-u-al-izm, s. In Philosophy, the system according to which all that is real is spirit: it is directly opposed to materialism; the state of being spiritual.

SPIRITUALIST, spir'it-u-al-ist, s. One who professes a regard for spiritual things only; one whose employment is spiritual; a believer in spiritualism.

SPIRITUALITY, spir'it-u-al'e-te, s. The quality of being spiritual; essence distinct from matter; intellectual nature; that which belongs to the church. In Law, spiritualities of a bishop, the profits which a bishop receives in his ecclesiastical character, in contradistinction to the profits which he acquires in his temporal capacity as a baron and lord of parliament, and which are termed his temporalities.—Cowel.

SPIRITUALIZATION, spir'it-u-al-e-za'shun, s. The act of spiritualizing.

SPIRITUALIZE, spir'it-u-al-ize, v. a. (spiritualiser, Fr.) To refine the intellect; to convert to a spiritual meaning. In Chemistry, to extract spirit from natural bodies.

SPIRITUALIZER, spir'it-u-al-i-zer, s. One who spiritualizes.

SPIRITUALLY, spir'it-u-al-le, ad. In a spiritual manner. Spiritually-minded, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, or of holy principles. Spiritually discerned, known, not by carnal reason, but by the peculiar illumination of the Holy Spirit.

SPIRITUALTY, spir'it-u-al-te, s. The clergy.—Not in use.

We of the spirituality
Shall raise your highness such a mighty sum,
As never did the clergy at one time.—Shaks.

SPIRITUOUS, spir'it-u-us, a. Containing or consisting of spirit; ardent; having the quality of spirit; fine; pure; active; lively; gay; vivid.

SPIRITUOUSNESS, spir'it-u-us-nes, s. The state or quality of being spirituous.

SPIRICKETING, spir'ket-ting, s. In Shipbuilding, the plank on the side between the water-way and the port-sill.

SPIROGLYPHUS, spi-ro-glif'us, s. A genus of Annelides, allied to Serpula: Family, Tubicolidae.

SPIROIL, spir'oil, s. In Chemistry, the supposed base of the volatile oil extracted from the flowers of the Spiræa ulmaria. The oil itself is a compound of C₁₂ H₅ O₄.

SPIROILATE, spir'oil-ate, s. A compound of spir-oilic acid and a base.

SPIROILIC ACID, spir-oil'ik as'id, s. A solid crystalline acid obtained from the volatile oil of Spiræa ulmaria. It has scarcely any smell, is tasteless, but produces a violent feeling of irritation in the pharynx, dissolves readily in alcohol and ether, and shows a tendency to crystallize.

SPIROLINA, spi-ro-li'na, s. (spira, a spire, Lat.) A genus of microscopic Foraminifera.

SPIROLOCULINA, spi-ro-lok-u-li'na, s. (spira, a spire, and loculus, a partition, Lat.) A genus of microscopic Foraminifera.

SPIROPTERA, spi-ropt'er-a, s. (spira, a spire, and pteron, a wing, Gr.) A genus of Entozoa: Order, Nematodea.

SPIROBIS—SPITTED.

SPIROBIS, spi-raw'bis, s. (spira, a spire, and orbis, a circle, Lat.) A genus of Annelides, allied to Serpula: Family, Tubicolidae.

SPIROSPERMUM, spi-ro-sper'mum, s. (spira, a spire, and sperma, a seed, Gr. the embryo being long and spirally twisted.) A genus of plants, natives of Madagascar: Order, Memispermaceæ.

SPIRT, spirt, v. n. To spring or stream out as a fluid suddenly, or at intervals;—v. a. to throw out in a jet;—s. sudden ejection; sudden effort; a fit.—See Spurt, of which this word is a different orthography.

SPIRTLE, spirt'l, v. a. To spirt in a scattering manner.

SPIRULA, spi'ru-la, s. (spira, a spire, Lat.) A genus of Mollusca, of the order Cephalopoda, and forming the family Spirulidae.

SPIRULIDÆ, spi-ru'le-de, s. (spirula, the only genus belonging to the family.) A name given by Professor Owen to a family of polythalamous, decapodous, dibranchiate Cephalopods, the shells of which are partly internal, cylindrical, multilocular, and discoid; the whorls separated; septa transverse and concave next the outlet, and with regular intervals; the siphon marginal and internal.

SPIRY, spi're, a. (from Spire.) Pyramidal; curled; wreathed.

SPISS, spis, a. (spissus, Lat.) Close; firm; thick.—Not used.

Spiss and dense, yet polished.—Brerewood.

SPISSATED, spis'sa-ted, a. Thickened.

SPISSITUDE, spis'se-tude, s. Grossness; thickness.

SPISULA, spis'u-la, s. A genus of bivalve Mollusca, founded on Macra fragilis and similar species, characterized by the ligament being subexternal, marginal, and not separate from the cartilage; posterior lateral teeth double and single.

SPIT, spit, s. (Dutch: spitu, Sax. spett, Swed. spid, Dan.) An iron prong or bar pointed, on which meat is roasted; such a depth of earth as is pierced by the spade at once; a small point of land running into the sea;—v. a. to thrust a spit through; to put upon a spit; to pierce; to spade; to dig.

SPIT, spit, v. a. Pret. and past part. spit; spat is obsolete, (spittan, Sax. spytter, Dan.) To eject from the mouth; to eject or throw out with violence;—v. n. to throw out saliva from the mouth;—s. (spyt, Dan.) what is ejected from the mouth; saliva. Spit-box, a vessel to receive discharges of spittle. Spit-venom, poison ejected from the mouth.

SPITAL, spit'al, s. A corrupt orthography of SPITTEL, spit'tel, s. hospital,—which see.

SPITCHCOCK, spitsh'kok, v. a. To split an eel lengthwise and broil it;—s. an eel so prepared.

SPIKE, spite, s. (spyt, Dutch.) Malice; rancour; hate; malignity. In spite of, notwithstanding; in defiance of. To outrage one's spite, to entertain a temporary hatred for something;—v. a. to be angry or vexed at; to treat maliciously; to thwart; to fill with spite or vexation; to offend; to vex.

SPIKEFUL, spite'fûl, a. Filled with spite; malignant.

SPIKEFULLY, spite'fûl-le, ad. Maliciously; malignantly.

SPIKEFULNESS, spite'fûl-nes, s. Malice; malignity.

SPITTED, spit'ted, part. a. Shot out into length, as a deer's horn.

SPITTER—SPLENDENT.

SPITTER, spit'tur, s. One who puts meat on a spit; one who ejects saliva from his mouth; a young deer whose horns begin to shoot or become sharp.

SPITTLE, spit'tl, s. The moisture of the mouth; saliva; a small sort of spade;—v. a. to dig or stir with a small spade.—Local in this sense.—See also Spital.

SPIZELLA, spi-zel'la, s. A genus of birds: Family, Fringillidae.

SPLACHNUM, splak'num, s. (splachnon, one of the Greek names of moss.) A genus of moss plants: Order, Bryaceae.

SPLANCHNIC, splangk'nik, a. (splanchna, the bowels, Gr.) Belonging to the viscera, as the splanchnic nerves.

SPLANCHNOGRAPHY, splangk-nog'gra-fe, s. (splanchnu, the bowels, and grapho, I write, Gr.) An anatomical description of the viscera.

SPLANCHNOLOGY, splangk-nol'o-je, s. (splanchna, the bowels, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) An anatomical treatise on the viscera.

SPLASH, splash, v. a. (from Plash.) To spatter with water, or with water and mud;—v. n. to strike and dash water about;—s. water, or water and dirt, thrown upon anything, or thrown from a puddle or the like.

SPLASHY, splash'y, a. Full of dirty water; wet; wet and muddy.

SPLAY, splay, v. a. To dislocate and break a horse's shoulder-bone; to spread;

Each bush a bar, each spray a banner splayed.—Mir. for Mag.

—a. displayed; spread; turned outward.

SPLAYED, splayd, a. Spread, or broad; turned outward. In Architecture, applied to whatever has one side making an oblique angle with the other, as the jambs or sides of a window, for the better lighting of a room.

SPLAYFOOT, spla'füt, } a. Having the foot SPLAYFOOTED, spla'füt-ed, } turned outward; having a wide foot. Splay-mouthed, having a wide mouth.

SPLEEN, spleen, s. (splen, Gr. and Lat.) In Anatomy, an organ situated on the posterior part of the left hypochondrium. Its outer surface is convex. The inner is divided by a groove, called the fissure of the spleen. Its uses are unknown;—anger; latent spite; ill humour; a fit of anger; a sudden motion; a fit;

Brief as the lightning in the collied night,
That in a spleen unfolds both earth and heaven.—Shaks.

melancholy; hypochondriacal affections.

SPLEENFUL, spleen'fúl, } a. Angry; peevish; fret-SPLEENISH, spleen'ish, } ful.

SPLEENISHLY, spleen'ish-le, ad. In a spleenish manner.

SPLEENISHNESS, spleen'ish-nes, s. State of being spleenish.

SPLEENLESS, spleen'les, a. Kind; gentle; mild.

SPLEENWORT, spleen'wurt, s. The common name of the Ferns of the genus Asplenium.

SPLEENY, spleen'e, a. Angry; peevish; fretful; melancholy; affected with nervous complaints.

SPLENALGIA, splen-al'je-a, s. (splen, the spleen, and algos, pain, Gr.) In Pathology, pain in the spleen.

SPLIDENT, splen'dent, a. (splendens, Lat.) Shining; glossy; beaming with light; very conspicuous; illustrious.

SPLENDID—SPLINTER.

SPLENDID, splen'did, a. (splendidus, Lat.) Shining; very bright; showy; magnificent; sumptuous; pompous; illustrious; heroic; brilliant; famous; celebrated.

SPLENDIDLY, splen'did-le, ad. With great brightness or brilliant light; magnificently; richly; sumptuously; with great pomp or show.

SPLENDOR, splen'dur, s. (splendor, Lat.) Great brightness; brilliant lustre; great show of riches and elegance; magnificence; pomp; parade; brilliance; eminence.

SPLENDOROUS, splen'drus, a. Having splendour.—Not used.

Whose splendrous arms shone like a mighty flame.—Drayton.

SPLENETIC, splen-et'ik, a. (spleneticus, Lat.) Affected with spleen; peevish; fretful;—s. a person affected with spleen.

SPLENIC, splen'ik, a. (splenique, Fr.) Belonging to the spleen, as the splenic vein.

SPLENISH, splen'ish, a. Fretful; peevish; splenetic.

SPLENITIS, splen-i'tis, s. (splen, the spleen, Gr.) Inflammation of the spleen.

SPLENITIVE, splen'e-tiv, a. Hot; fiery; passionate.—Obsolete.

Take thy fingers from my throat;
For though I am not splenitive and rash,
Yet I have in me something dangerous.—Shaks.

SPLENIUS, splen'o-us, s. (splenium, a strap, Lat. in reference to its form.) In Anatomy, a muscle arising from the last cervical and six upper dorsal vertebrae, and inserted into the mastoid process of the temporal, and to the occipital bone: it brings the head and neck backwards laterally, and, when both act, they pull the head directly backwards.

SPLENIZATION, splen-e-z'a-shun, s. (splen, the spleen, Gr.) In Pathology, a changed produced in the lungs by inflammation, in which they resemble the substance of the spleen.

STER, ster. An affix in nouns, such as webster, spinster, from the Saxon steore, guidance, direction.

STERCORACEOUS, ster-ko-ra'shus, a. (stercoreus, stercorosus, from stercus, dung, Lat.) Pertaining to dung; of the nature of dung.

STERCORAL, ster'ko-ral, a. In Pathology, pertaining to or connected with the fœces, as stercoral abscess.

STERCORANIST, ster'ko-ran-ist, } s. In Ecclesi-STERCORARIAN, ster-ko-ra're-an, } astical History, a name of reproach given to one of those divines in the ninth century, who affirmed that the elements of the eucharist suffered the same changes as other food.

STERCORARY, ster'ko-rar-e, s. A place properly secured from the weather for containing dung.

STERCORATION, ster-ko-ra'shun, s. (stercoratio, Lat.) The act of manuring.

STERCORIANISM, ster-ko're-an-izm, s. The doctrine of the Stercorians, or Stercoranists.

STERCULIA, ster-ku'le-a, s. (sterculium, a dunghill, Lat. in reference to the fetid smell of the leaves and flowers of some of the species.) A genus of plants: Type of the order Sterculiaceæ.

STERCULIACEÆ, ster-ku-le-a'se-e, s. (sterculia, one of the genera.) An order of Exogenous plants, composed of large umbrageous tropical trees, with simple or compound leaves, and axillary panicles or racemes of small white, greenish, or brownish flowers; calyx naked; deciduous; petals none, four, five, or twenty; anthers bilocular; styles equal in number to the cells of the ovary; carpels four or five, distinct.

STERE—STEREOTYPOGRAPHER.

STERE, stere, s. In the new system of measures in France, the unit of solid measure = a cubic metre, or 35.316581 imp. cubic feet.

STEREOBATA, ste-re-o-ba'ta, s. In Architecture, the lowest division in an order of columns.—See Pedestal.

STEREOCAULON, ster-e-o-kaw'lon, s. (stereos, hard, and caulon, a stem, Gr.) A genus of Lichens: Tribe, Cænothalam.

STEREOCHROMY, ste-re-ok'ro-me, s. (stereos, hard or solid, and chroma, colour, Gr.) A method of painting walls, proposed to supersede fresco, and by which the material can be consolidated at pleasure.

STEREOGRAPHIC, ster-e-o-graf'ik, } a. (from STEREOGRAPHICAL, ster-e-o-graf'e-kal, } Stereo- graphy.) Made or done according to the rules of stereography. Stereographic projection, the projection of the sphere upon the plane of one of its great circles, the eye being placed in the pole of that circle.—See Projection.

STEREOGRAPHICALLY, ste-re-o-graf'e-kal-le, ad.
By delineation on a plane.

STEREOGRAPHY, ste-re-og'ra-fe, s. (stereos, solid, and grapho, I write, Gr.) That branch of solid geometry which demonstrates the properties, and shows the construction, of all regularly-defined solids; the art or art of delineating solids on a plane.

STEREOMETER, ste-re-om'e-tur, s. (stereos, solid, and metron, a measure, Gr.) In Hydrodynamica, an instrument for determining the specific gravity of solid, porous, and liquid bodies. An instrument more recently invented for the same purpose is called a conimeter.

STEREOMETRICAL, ste-re-o-met're-kal, a. Pertaining to or performed by stereometry.

STEREOMETRY, ste-re-om'e-tre, s. (stereos, solid, and metron, a measure, Gr.) The mensuration of solids, or the finding of the cubic contents of bodies.

STEREOPES, ste're-o-pis, s. (stereos, solid, and pos, a foot, Gr.) A genus of Coleopterous insects: Family, Stenelytra.

STEREOTOMICAL, ste-re-o-tom'e-kal, a. Pertaining to or performed by stereotomy.

STEREOTOMY, ste-re-ot'o-me, s. (stereos, solid, and tome, incision, Gr.) The science of cutting solids to suit certain conditions required for their forms.

STEREOTYPE, ste're-o-tipe, s. (stereos, fixed, solid, and typos, type, form, Gr.) Literally, a fixed metal type; hence, a plate of fixed or solid metallic types for printing books; the art of making such plates; the art of printing with such plates; also, the impression made by such plates, as, the book is printed in stereotype;—a. pertaining to or done by stereotype, as, a stereotype copy of the work;—v. a. to make stereotype; to print with stereotype,—hence, a phrase or expression which any one habitually employs is called 'a stereotyped expression.'

STEREOTYPER, ste're-o-ti-pur, s. One who makes stereotype.

STEREOTYPOGRAPHER, ste-re-o-ti-pog'ra-fur, s. A stereotype printer.

STEREOTYPOGRAPHY—STERNACHIDÆ.

STERNAGE—STERNUM.

STEREOTYPOGRAPHY, ste-re-o-ti-pog'ra-fe, s. The art of stereotype printing.

STERIGMA, ste-rig'ma, s. (Greek, a fork, because the larger stamens are connected at the base and forked at the top.) A genus of Cruciferous plants: Suborder, Notorhizæ.

STERILE, ster'il, a. (French, sterilis, Lat.) Barren or unfruitful; producing no young or no crop; destitute of ideas or sentiment. Sterile flower, the name given by Tournefort to those flowers which bear stamens only.

STERILITY, ster-il'e-te, s. (sterilité, Fr. sterilitas, Lat.) The state of being sterile; barrenness; unproductiveness.

STERILIZE, ster'e-lize, v. a. To make sterile; to exhaust of fertility.

STERLING, ster'ling, a. (probably from Easterlings, or East Saxons, who, in the time of the Heptarchy, were authorized to coin money of the legal standard; or from steorn, government, Sax. i. e. the government coin, or coming up to the value of the government coin.) Coined in full proportion or weight; applied to English money, as, a pound sterling; genuine; pure; of excellent quality, as, a work of sterling merit;—s. English coin; standard weight;

Sterling was the known and approved standard in England.—Leake.

It sometimes occurs for the starling, or defence to the pier of a bridge. Sterling-penny, the smallest English coin before the reign of Edward I. It was marked with a cross, or two strokes crosswise, so that, upon occasion, it might be cut into halfpence or farthings, i. e. four things.

STERNA, ster'na, s. The Terns, a genus of birds belonging to the Lariæ, or Gull family.

STERNACHIDÆ, ster-nak'e-de, s. (sternachus, one of the genera.) A family of Apodal fishes, with linear, compressed, anguilliform, and often with small scales.

STERNAGE, stern'aje, s. The steerage or stern.—Obsolete.

Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England as dead midnight still.—Shaks.

STERNAL, ster'nal, a. (from sternon, the breast-bone, Gr.) Pertaining to the breast-bone.

STERNALGIA, ster-nal'je-a, s. (sternon, the sternum, and algos, pain, Gr.) In Pathology, pain about the sternum.

STERNAPSIS, stern-ap'sis, s. A genus of Mesobranchiate Annelides: Family, Thalassamenidæ.

STERNARCHUS, ster-nark'us, s. A genus of fishes: Type of the family Sternachidæ.

STERNBERGIA, stern-ber'je-a, s. (in honour of the celebrated botanist, Count Caspar Sternberg.) A genus of plants: Order, Amaryllidaceæ. Also, a singular genus of fossil plants from the Coal formation, called Columnaria by Sternberg.

STERNBERGITE, stern-ber'jite, s. (in honour of Count Caspar Sternberg of Prague.) A mineral which occurs generally in implanted crystals, attached to the matrix laterally, so as to form rose-like aggregations; colour, pinchbeck-brown; lustre, in some parts, highly metallic. Composition—silver, 33.2; iron, 36.0; sulphur, 30.0: sp. gr. 4.2 to 4.25; hardness = 1.0 to 1.5.

STERNED, stern'd, a. In compounds, having a stern of a particular shape, as, square-sterned, pink-sterned, &c.

STERNLY, stern'le, ad. (from the adjective Stern.) In a stern manner; severely.

STERNMOST, stern'moste, a. (stern and most.) Farthest in the rear; farthest astern.

STERNNESS, stern'nes, s. Severity of look or of manners; austerity; rigour.

STERNODYNIA, ster-no-din'e-a, s. (sternon, the sternum, and odyne, pain, Gr.) The same as Sternalgia.

STERNON, ster'nun, s. (Greek.) See Sternum, the word chiefly or wholly used.

STERNOPTYX, ster-nop'tiks, s. A genus of fishes with short broad bodies, but excessively thin and subpellucid; the head and eyes large: Family, Salmonidæ.

STERNOTHELUS, ster-no-the'rus, s. A subgenus of Emydæ, or River Tortoises, being a section of the genus Emys.

STERNUM, ster'num, s. (the Latin form of sternon, the breast-bone, Gr.) The breast-bone. It constitutes the anterior paries of the thoracic cavity in man; it is articulated laterally with the clavicle and the seven superior or sternal ribs, and terminated below by the ensiform cartilage. Sterno-clavicular, designating an articulation which exists between the sternum and clavicle. Sterno-cleido-mastoidens, a muscle arising from the summit of the sternum and the sternal portion of the clavicle, and inserted into the mastoid process of the temporal bone; it turns the head to one side, and bends it forward. Sterno-costal, pertaining to the sternum and the ribs; applied particularly to a muscle lying on each side of the under surface of the sternum, upon the cartilages of the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth ribs. Sterno-hyoideus, a muscle arising from the sternum, and inserted into the os hyoides; it depresses the larynx, and furnishes a fixed point for the depressors of the jaw. Sterno-thyroidens, a muscle arising from the sternum, and inserted into the thyroid cartilage; it draws the larynx downwards.

STERNUTATION—STEWARD.

STERNUTATION, ster-nu-ta'shun, s. (sternutatio, from sternuo, I sneeze, Lat.) The act of sneezing.

STERNUTATIVE, ster-nu-ta-tiv, a. Having the quality of provoking to sneeze.

STERNUTATORY, ster-nu-ta-tor-e, a. Sternutative; —s. a substance that provokes sneezing.

STERQUILINOUS, ster-kwil'e-nus, a. (sterquilinum, a dunghill, Lat.) Pertaining to a dunghill; hence, mean; dirty; paltry;

Now, — any sterquilinous rascal is licensed to dirt in the faces of sovereign princes in open printed language. —Howell (1684).

a suit is now to institute an action. Out of suit, having no correspondence. Suit-covenant, a covenant to sue at a certain court. Suit-court, the court in which tenants owe attendance to their lord. Suit-silver, a small rent or sum of money paid by the freeholders of some manors to excuse their appearance at the court of their lord. — Cowel; — v. a. to fit; to adapt; to become; to be fitted to; to dress; to clothe;

Suit the action to the word. — Shaks.

Such a Sebastian was my brother too,
So went he suit to his watery tomb. — Shaks.

— v. n. to agree; to accord, as, to suit with.

SUITABLE, su'ta-bl, a. Fitting; according with; agreeable to; proper; becoming adequate.

SUITABLENESS, su'ta-bl-nes, s. Fitness; propriety; agreeableness; state of being adapted or accommodated.

SUITABLY, su'ta-ble, ad. Fitly; agreeably; with propriety.

SUITE, sweet, s. (French.) Consecution; regular set; retinue; company.

SUITOR, su'tur, s. One who sues; a wooer; a petitioner; an applicant.

She hath been a suit to me for her brother. — Shaks.

In Law, one who sues or prosecutes a demand of right; a party in a suit, whether as plaintiff, defendant, petitioner, appellant, witness, juror, or the like.

SUITRESS, su'tres, s. A female supplicant or suit.

SULA. — See Booby.

SULCATE, sul'kate, } a. (sulcus, a furrow, Lat.)

SULCATED, sul'kay-ted, } In Botany and Zoology, furrowed; grooved; scored with deep channels longitudinally.

SULIOTES, sul'e-otse, s. The inhabitants of Sal, a mountainous district of southern Albania.

SULKILY, sul'ke-le, ad. Sullenly; morosely.

SULKINESS, sul'ke-nes, s. Sullenness; sourness; moroseness.

SULKY, sul'ke, a. (solcen, sluggish, Sax.) Sullen; sour; heavy; obstinate; morose.

Such sullen planets at my birth did shine. — Drake.

SULLENLY, sul'len-le, ad. Gloomily; malignantly; intractably; with moroseness.

SULLENNESS, sul'len-nes, s. State or quality of being sullen; gloominess; malignity; intractableness.

SULLENS, sul'lens, s. plu. A morose temper; a set of sullenness. — A burlesque word.

Let them die that age and sullen have. — Shaks.

SULLIAGE, sul'le-aje, s. (souillage, Fr.) Pollution; filth; stain of dirt; foulness. — Not in use.

Calumniate stoutly, for though we wipe away with never so much care the dirt thrown at us, there still is left some sullage behind. — Decay of Chr. Piety.

SULLY, sul'le, v. a. (souiller, Fr.) To soil; to dirt; to spot; to tarnish; to stain; — v. n. to be soiled or tarnished; — s. soil; tarnish; spot.

SULPHAMETHYLENE, sul-fa-me'the-lene, s. A bluish-white crystalline substance, obtained from the action of a current of dry ammonia on methylene sulphate of methyle. Empirical formula, $\text{C}_2\text{H}_4\text{NS}_2\text{O}_6$.

SULPHARSINE, sul-far'sine, s. An ethereal liq-

possessing a very disagreeable odour, obtained by the decomposition of alcarsin by means of sulphuretted hydrogen.

SULPHATE, sulfate, s. A salt formed by the union of sulphuric acid with a salifiable base. The following sulphates occur in Mineralogy:—Sulphate of alumina, found native in crystalline masses and efflorescences; colour white; translucent; lustre silky; taste similar to pure alum. Composition—sulphuric acid, 36.4; alumina, 16.0; peroxide of iron, 0.4; water, 46.6; very soft: sp. gr. 1.66. Sulphate of ammonia, a mineral of a greyish or yellow colour, generally translucent or opaque; occurs stalactitic, pulverulent, or in mealy efflorescences. Composition—ammonia, 22.80; sulphuric acid, 53.29; water, 23.91. Sulphate of baryta, a mineral called also heavy-spar,—see Barytes. Sulphate of cobalt, a mineral which occurs investing other minerals in small friable masses, and in stalactites: the masses are semi-transparent and crystalline; lustre pearly; streak yellow; taste styptic and bitter; colour rose, or flesh-red. Composition—sulphuric acid, 30.2; oxide of cobalt, 28.7; oxide of iron, 0.9; water, 41.2. Sulphate of copper, a mineral which occurs massive, stalactitic, and pulverulent; lustre vitreous; translucent; cleavage imperfect; fracture conchoidal; taste nauseous and metallic; colour deep sky-blue, sometimes passing into bluish-green. Composition—oxide of copper, 31.80; sulphuric acid, 32.14; water, 36.06; sp. gr. 2.213; hardness = 2.5. Sulphate of iron, a mineral which presents several shades of green; it occurs massive, pulverulent, and in stalactites; translucent; lustre vitreous; taste extremely astringent; fracture conchoidal. Composition—sulphuric acid, 28.8; protoxide of iron, 25.7; water, 45.4: sp. gr. 1.84 to 1.9; hardness = 2.0. Sulphate of lead, a mineral of a white, grey, or yellowish colour; it occurs crystalized in rhombic prisms with dihedral terminations; structure lamellar; fracture conchoidal and resinous; brittle, and yields to the nail. Composition—protoxide of lead, 72.47; sulphuric acid, 26.09; silica, 0.51; water, 0.12: sp. gr. 6.23 to 6.31; hardness = 3.0. Sulphate of lime, gypsum, plaster of Paris, anhydrite, or alabaster. Sulphate of magnesia, a mineral of a white or grey colour; transparent or opaque; taste bitter and saline; occurs in crystalline fibres, rarely pulverulent. Composition—sulphuric acid, 32.57; magnesia, 16.0; water, 51.43: sp. gr. 1.66 to 1.75. Sulphate of potash, a mineral which occurs massive; mammillary, apparently formed in successive layers; lustre vitreous; translucent; taste saline and bitter; colour white or yellow, with certain bluish or greenish stains. It consists of sulphate of potash with a trace of sulphate and muriate of copper: sp. gr. 1.731; hardness = 2.5 to 3.0. Sulphate of soda, a mineral which occurs in efflorescences of a yellow or greyish-white colour, or in an earthy form, but more frequently dissolved in mineral waters; translucent or opaque; lustre vitreous on the fresh fracture, dull on the surface; extremely efflorescent. Composition—soda, 35.0; sulphuric acid, 44.8; water, 20.2: sp. gr. 1.47. Sulphate of zinc, a mineral of a greyish, yellowish, reddish, or greenish-white; it seldom occurs distinctly crystalized; generally massive, stalactitic, botryoidal, reniform, and investing; lustre vitreous; streak white; transparent or translucent; taste nauseous and metallic. Composition—oxide of zinc, 28.5; sulphuric acid, 29.8; oxide of manganese, 0.7; oxide of iron, 0.4; water, 40.8: sp. gr. 2.036; hardness = 2.0 to 2.5. Sulphato-carbonate of lead, a mineral of a greenish-white, pale-yellow, or grey colour: it occurs in indistinct crystals, presenting a somewhat fibrous character; lustre adamantine; streak white; translucent. Composition—carbonate of lead, 46.9; sulphate of lead, 53.1: sp. gr. 6.8 to 7.0; hardness = 2.5. Sulphato-tricarbonate of lead, a mineral of a white, pale-yellow, green, or grey colour: it occurs crystalized, but when maculated, their forms are with difficulty determinable; streak white; translucent; lustre resinous, inclining to adamantine. Composition—carbonate of lead, 72.5; sulphate of lead, 27.5: sp. gr. 6.2 to 6.4; hardness = 2.5.

SULPHISATYDE—SULPHOCYANOGEN.

SULPHISATYDE, sul-fe'-za-tide, s. The name given by Erdmann to a compound obtained by the action of alcohol, saturated with sulphuretted hydrogen, on isatine.

SULPHITE, sul'fite, s. A combination of sulphurous acid with a salifiable base.

SULPHOADIPIC ACID, sul-fo-a-dip'ik as'sid, s. (sulphur, and adepe, fat, Lat.) The name given by Chevreul to a peculiar compound of hyposulphuric acid and organic matter, obtained from the action of sulphuric acid on olive oil.

SULPHOBENZIDATE, sul-fo-ben'ze-date, s. A compound of sulphobenzidic acid and a salifiable base.

SULPHOBENZIDE, sul-fo-ben'zide, s. A substance obtained in regular, inodorous, colourless crystals, by treating benzole with sulphuric acid. Formula, $C_{12}H_5SO_2$.

SULPHOBENZIDIC ACID, sul-fo-ben-zid'ik as'sid, s. An acid formed by dissolving sulphobenzide in oil of vitriol, or by the action of fuming sulphuric acid on benzole. It is a very sour liquid, and crystalizes when evaporated to the consistence of syrup. Formula, $C_{12}H_5S_2O_5$, in its salts.

SULPHOBENZOIC ACID, sul-fo-ben-zo'ik as'sid, s. An acid obtained by treating an acid solution of hyposulphobenzate of baryta with diluted sulphuric acid, and evaporating the filtered solution. It forms a colourless crystalline mass; deliquescent in a moist atmosphere, and having a very sour taste. Formula, $C_{14}H_4O_3 + S_2O_5 + 2aq$. It is also called hyposulphobenzoic acid.

SULPHOCETIC ACID, sul-fo-se'tic as'sid, s. A name given to the bisulphate of oxide of cetile, a compound that has not yet been obtained in a separate form. It is formed when ethal is heated with sulphuric acid, and the mixture yields double salts. Probable formula, $2SO_3, C_{10}O + aq$.

SULPHOCHLORISATYDE, sul-fo-klo-r'i'-sa-tide, s. Erdmann's name for a compound substance obtained by subjecting chlorisatine to the action of alcohol, saturated with sulphuretted hydrogen.

SULPHOCYANIC ACID, sul-fo-si-an'ik as'sid, s. An acid which occurs in the seeds and blossoms of Cruciferous plants, and in the saliva of man and sheep. It is a colourless fluid, of a pure acid taste. On being treated with chlorine or nitric acid, it is deprived of hydrogen, and sulphocyanogen is produced. It is also called hydrosulphocyanic acid, sulphuretted chyzic acid, and sulphuro-prussic acid. Formula, $Csy + H$. Equiv. 59.59.

SULPHOCYANOGEN, sul-fo-si-an'o'-jen, s. A yellow powder, insoluble in water, alcohol, and ether, obtained from the union of cyanogen with sulphur. It is also called the bisulphuret of cyanogen.

Formula, $Cy + 2S$. Symb. Csy. Equiv. 58.59. SULPHOCYANURET, sul-fo-si-an'-u-ret, s. A compound of sulphuretted hydrogen and cyanogen.

SULPHOETHIOLIC ACID, sul-fo-eth-u'-lik as'id, s. An acid obtained by gently heating mercaptan with nitric acid. It forms with bases easily crystallizable salts, which are very soluble in water. Formula, $C_4 H_5 S_2 O_3$.

SULPHOGLYCERATE, sul-fo-gli'se-rate, s. A compound of sulphoglyceric acid with a base.

SULPHOGLYCERIC ACID, sul-fo-gli'se-rik as'id, s. A name given to the bisulphate or oxide of glyceric acid, an acid which may be obtained by treating glycerine with sulphuric acid. It is a very sour liquid, which undergoes spontaneous decomposition. Formula, $2SO_3, C_6 H_7 O_5 + aq$.

SULPHOINDIGOTATE, sul-fo-in-de-got'-ate, s. A compound of sulphoindigotic acid with a base.

SULPHOINDIGOTIC ACID, sul-fo-in-de-got'-ik as'id, s. A solid dark-blue substance, soluble in water, of an acid and astringent taste, obtained by the action of sulphuric acid on indigo.

SULPHOMESITYLATE, sul-fo-mez-it'e-late, s. A compound of the hypothetical acid, sulphomesitylic, and a base.

SULPHOMESITYLIC ACID, sul-fo-mez-it'e-lik as'id, s. An acid which has not been obtained in a separate form. When its salts are decomposed with this view, a liquid is obtained which blackens on being evaporated, and is then found to contain free sulphuric acid, while it has the odour of sulphurous acid and oxide of mesitule. Formula, $C_3 H_3 O, HO, SO_3$.

SULPHONAPHTHALATE, sul-fo-naf'tha-late, s. A compound of sulphonaphthaline with a base.—See Sulphonaphthaline.

SULPHONAPHTHALIDE, sul-fo-naf'tha-lide, s. A compound obtained along with sulphonaphthaline, by the action of sulphuric acid upon naphthaline. Formula, $C_{24} H_{10} SO_2$.

SULPHONAPHTHALINE, sul-fo-naf'tha-line, s. A compound obtained from the action of sulphuric acid upon naphthaline. It is crystalline; readily soluble in alcohol and water; reddens moistened litmus paper powerfully; has an acid bitter taste, and is hence sometimes called sulphonaphthalic acid. It combines readily with alkalis, forming salts termed sulphonaphthalates. Formula, $C_{20} H_8 SO_2$.

SULPHOPROTEIC ACID, sul-fo-pro'te-ik as'id, s. An acid obtained from the union of proteine with diluted sulphuric acid. Formula, $Pr + SO_3$.

SULPHOPURPURATE, sul-fo-pur-pu'-rate, s. A compound of sulphopurpuric acid with a base.

SULPHOPURPURIC ACID, sul-fo-pur-pu'-rik as'id, s. A purple powder which separates by the addition of water to a solution of one part of indigo in eight of sulphuric acid.

SULPHOSACCHARIC ACID, sul-fo-sa-kar'ik as'id, s. An acid obtained by the action of sulphuric acid on sugar of starch. It is a sweet, slightly acid liquid; reddens vegetable blues, and forms salts with almost all bases. Formula uncertain.

SULPHOSALT, sul-fo-sawlt, } s. The same as sulphosel, sul-fo-sel, } phur-salt.—See under Sulphur.

SULPHOSINAPISINE, sul-fo-sin-ap'e-sine, s. (sulphur, and sinape, mustard, Lat.) A crystallizable substance obtained from mustard seed. It appears to contain sulphur, carbon, hydrogen, and nitrogen. SULPHOVINATE, sul-fo-vi'-nate, s. A compound of sulphuric acid with a salifiable base. Sulphinate of etherole, an oily colourless liquid, is also sulphatic acid; oil of wine; heavy oil of wine. Formula, $2SO_3 + C_8 H_9 O$.

SULPHOVINIC ACID, sul-fo-vin'ik as'id, s. (sulph and vitis, the vine, Lat.) An acid produced by the action of sulphuric acid upon alcohol, and to be a necessary intermediate substance in the formation of ether. It is composed of two equivalents of sulphuric acid and two of alcohol.

SULPHUR, sul'fur, s. (solfra, Ital. soufre, Fr.) Brimstone; a simple, combustible, solid, non-metallic, brittle, hard, crystallized, yellow substance, the produce chiefly of volcanic countries. It burns with a blue flame, and pungent suffocating odour; melts at a heat of 226° ; becomes thick and dark-coloured by an excess of heat, and takes fire at 569° . When a lump of it is rubbed, it becomes negatively electric; it unites readily with oxygen, metals, forming sulphurets in the latter case, and acids the former. Sulphur-vivum, the impure sulphur remaining in the alembic after sulphur has been sublimed from the crude state. Sulphur-s certain double sulphurets, so designated by Berzelius: the electro-negative sulphurets constitute sulphur-acids, and the electro-positive sulphurets sulphur-bases.

SULPHURATE, sul'fu-rate, a. Of or belonging to sulphur; of the colour of sulphur;—v. a. to combine with sulphur.

SULPHURATION, sul-fu-ra'shun, s. The act of bleaching anything, by subjecting it to the action of the fumes of burning sulphur.

SULPHUREOUS, sul-fu're-us, a. Consisting of sulphur; having the qualities of sulphur; impregnated with sulphur.

Her snakes untied, sulphureous waters drink.—J. SULPHUREOUSLY, sul-fu're-us-le, adv. In a sulphureous manner.

SULPHUREOUSNESS, sul-fu're-us-ness, s. The state or quality of being sulphureous.

SULPHURET, sul-fu-ret, s. A compound of sulphur with a metal or other simple body, or with earth or alkali. The following impure sulphurets are the most usual of those noticed by miners:—Sulphuret of antimony, a mineral which occurs massive, disseminated, and crystallized in rhombic prisms; colour, light-grey; brittle, yielding readily to the pressure of the nail; when rubbed on it, and emits a sulphurous odour. Composition—antimony, 73.77; sulphur, 26.23: sp. gr. 4.3 to 4.4; hardness = 2.0. Sulphuret of arsenic,—see Antimony and Realgar. Sulphuret of bismuth, a mineral of a colour between tin-white and lead-grey but it is sometimes of a yellowish-white, with metallic lustre; it occurs in acicular prisms, and is soft and brittle. Composition—bismuth, 80.1; sulphur, 18.72: sp. gr. 6.5; hardness = 2.5. Sulphuret of cobalt, a mineral of a steel-grey colour; massive, with an uneven fracture presenting a granular surface; botryoidal; not metallic; fracture uneven, or imperfect conchoidal. Composition—cobalt, 43.20; copper, 14.40; iron, 3.53; sulphur, 38.50: sp. gr. 6.3 to 6.4; hardness = 5.5. Sulphuret of copper,—see Copper. Sulphuret of lead.—See Galen.

SULPHURETTED—SULPHUROUS.

phuret of manganese, a mineral of a brownish-black colour; it occurs massive, sometimes botryoidal, with an imperfect metallic lustre; streak dark-green; opaque. Composition—protoxide of manganese, 85.0; sulphur, 15.0: sp. gr. 3.95 to 4.05; hardness = 3.5 to 4.0. Sulphuret of mercury, a mineral which varies in colour from carmine to lead-grey; structure, lamellar; it occurs crystalized, massive, fibrous, and parverulent. Composition—mercury, 84.50; sulphur, 14.75: sp. gr. 6.7 to 8.2; hardness = 2.0 to 2.5. Sulphuret of molybdena, a mineral which occurs massive, with a lamellar structure, and of the colour of fresh-cut metallic lead. Composition—molybdena, 60; sulphur, 40: sp. gr. 4.4 to 4.7; hardness = 1.0 to 1.5. Sulphuret of nickel, a mineral which occurs in capillary and sometimes diverging filaments of a yellowish colour, inclining to steel-grey; it is flexible; opaque; lustre metallic; not magnetic. Composition—sulphur, 35.24; nickel, 64.76; with traces of cobalt and arsenic: sp. gr. 6.45; hardness about 4. Sulphuret of silver, a mineral of a dark lead-grey colour, shining metallic lustre, malleable and sectile, yielding readily to the knife. Composition—silver, 85.0; sulphur, 15.0: sp. gr. 6.9 to 7.2; hardness = 2.0 to 2.5. Sulphuret of silver and antimony, a very rare mineral which occurs in small crystals, and consisting chiefly of the ingredients indicated by the name: sp. gr. 5.5 to 5.6; hardness = 2.0 to 2.5. Sulphuret of silver and copper, a mineral which occurs compact; colour steel-grey, with a metallic lustre. Composition—copper, 30.83; silver, 52.87; sulphur, 15.96; iron, 0.34: sp. gr. 6.25; hardness = 3.0 to 4.0. Sulphuret of tin, a mineral of a steel-grey colour; fracture granular and uneven; opaque and brittle. Composition—tin, 34.0; copper, 36.0; iron, 2.0; sulphur, 25.0: sp. gr. 4.35 to 4.76; hardness = 4.0. Sulphuret of zinc, a mineral of a brown, yellow, red, black, and rarely green colour; it occurs crystalized and amorphous; structure perfectly lamellar; lustre splendid; translucent or opaque. Composition—zinc, 61.5; sulphur, 33.0; iron, 4.0: sp. gr. 4.0 to 4.2; hardness = 3.5 to 4.0. SULPHURETTED, sul'fu-ret-ed, a. Having sulphur in combination, as sulphuretted hydrogen.

SULPHURIC, sul-fu'rik, a. Pertaining to sulphur; containing sulphur. Sulphuric acid, an acid that has been long known and very extensively employed when combined with water, in which state it is best known; it was originally, and still is frequently called oil of vitriol. When pure, it is a dense, colourless, oily liquid; boils at 620° F., and has a specific gravity, in its most concentrated form, of from 1.847 to 1.850. It is one of the strongest acids with which chemists are acquainted, and, when undiluted, is powerfully corrosive: it decomposes all animal and vegetable substances by the aid of heat, causing deposition of charcoal and formation of water: it has a strong sour taste, and reddens litmus paper, even though greatly diluted: it unites with alkaline substances, and separates all other acids more or less completely from their combinations with the alkalis: symb. SO₃. Sulphuric ether, an ether obtained either by distilling a mixture of sulphuric acid in alcohol, or by suffering alcohol gradually to dribble into the heated and somewhat diluted acid.

SULPHUROUS, sul-fu-rus, a. Like sulphur; containing sulphur. Sulphurous acid, a gaseous, colourless acid, of a pungent suffocating odour, being that emitted by burning sulphur. Symb. SO₂ or $\frac{S}{2}$. Equiv. 32.1.

SULPHURWORT, sul'fur-wurt, s. A plant belonging to the genus Pencedanum.

SULPHURY, sul'fur-e, a. Pertaining to sulphur; having the qualities of sulphur.

SULTAN, sul'tan, s. (Arabic.) An appellation given to the emperor of the Turkish dominions. Sultan-flower, a species of plants of the genus Centaurea.

SULTANA, sul-ta'na, } s. The queen of a sul-SULTANESS, sul'ta-nes, } tan; the empress of the Turks.

SULTANAS, sul-ta'nas, s. A name given by sailors to ships belonging to Turkey; a kind of raisin.

SULTANSHIP, sul-tan'ship, s. The office or state of a sultan.

SULTANIN, sul'ta-nin, s. A Turkish gold coin worth about 8s. sterling.

SULTANRY, sul'tan-re, s. An eastern empire; the dominion of a sultan.

The sultany of the Mamelukes.—Bacon.

SULTRINESS, sul'tre-nes, s. (from Sultry.) The state of being sultry.

SULTRY, sul'tre, a. (schewl, Germ. from swolath, swote, heat, Sax.) Very hot; burning and oppressive; hot and close; hot and cloudy.

SUM, sum, s. (somme, Fr. summe, Germ. som, Dutch, summa, Lat.) The aggregate or amount of two or more numbers; magnitudes or quantities of particulars; sum is generally applied to numbers, number to persons; a quantity of money, or currency; compendium; abridgment; the substance; the amount;

The sum of duty but two words contain,
Be humble and be just.—Prior.

height; completion;

Thus I have told thee all my state, and brought My story to the sum of earthly bliss
Which I enjoy.—Milton.

—v. a. to add particulars into one whole; to collect two or more particular numbers into one; to cast up; to bring or cast into a small compass; to condense or comprise in a few words. In Falconry, to have feathers full grown.

With prosperous wing full summed.—Milton.

SUMACH, su'mak, s. (French and German; sumak, Pers.) The name of plants belonging to the genus Rhus; many of the species are used in tanning and dyeing.

SUMLESS, sum'les, a. Not to be computed.

SUMMANUS, sum-ma'nus, s. (Latin, from summus, supreme, and manes, a dead body, a spirit.) In Mythology, a surname of Pluto, as prince of the dead. He had a temple at Rome, and the Romans believed that the thunderbolts of Jupiter were in his power during the night.

SUMMARILY, sum-ma-re-le, ad. In a summary manner; briefly; concisely; in a short way or method.

SUMMARY, sum-ma-re, a. Reduced into a narrow compass; into few words; short; brief; concise; compendious;—s. an abridged account; an abstract; an abridgment or compendium.

SUMMATION, sum-ma'shun, s. The act of forming a total amount; an aggregate.

SUMMER, sum'mur, s. One who sums up.

SUMMER, sum'mur, s. (summer, somer, Sax. sommer, Germ. and Dan.) The season of the year in which SUMMERHOUSE—SUMMONS.

the sun arrives at the highest solstice, embracing in Britain the months of May, June, and July. Summer is also often used to denote one half of the year, viz., the time in which the sun passes through the northern signs, beginning about the 21st of March, and continuing till the 22d of September, exceeding the winter, or time in which he passes through the winter signs, by about seven days. In Architecture, any large piece of timber supported on two strong piers or posts, and serving as a lintel to a door, window, &c.; a large stone laid over columns and pilasters in the commencement of a cross vault; it is also used synonymously with girder. Summer-colt, the undulating state of the atmosphere near the surface of the ground when heated—(local). Summer-cypress, the annual plant Kochia scoparia. Summer-ducks, the beautiful aquatic birds of the genus Dendronessa. Summer-fallow, in Agriculture, naked fallow; land bare of crops during the summer. Summer-grope or vine, the plant Vitis aestivalis, a native of North America, of the berries of which a very good house wine is often made. Summer-icheat, spring wheat;—v. a. to plough and work repeatedly in summer; to prepare for a crop of wheat or other grain; to keep warm—(obsolete in this sense);

Maid well summer'd and kept warm.

—v. n. to pass the summer or warm season.

The fowls shall summer upon them.—Isa. xviii. 6.

SUMMERHOUSE, sum'mer-hows, s. A house in a garden used in summer; a house for residence in during the summer months.

SUMMERING, sum'mer-ing, s. In Architecture, summerings are synonymous with the beds of a stone in the construction of a vault.—See beds of a stone, under Bed.

SUMMERSET. } Obsolete modes of spelling Som-SOMMERSAULT. } erset.

SUMMIST, sum'mist, s. One who forms an abridgment.—Obsolete.

The law of the pope given by summits and canonists.—Dering (1576).

SUMMIT, sum'mit, s. (summitas, Lat. from summus, high, Lat.) The top; the highest point or degree. In Conchology, the most elevated point of the shell in which the hinge is placed.

SUMMITLESS, sum'mit-less, a. Having no summit.

SUMMON, sum'mun, v. a. (submoneo, or summoneo, Lat.) To call or cite to appear by authority; to appear at a place specified, or to attend in person to some public duty, or both, as, to summon a jury or parliament; to give notice officially to a person to appear in court and defend, or to act as a witness; to call or command; to call up or excite into action.

Love, safety, duty, summon us away.—Pope.

Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood.—Shaks.

SUMMONER, sum'mun-ur, s. One who summons or cites by authority; a messenger of the sheriff employed to warn people to appear in court.

SUMMONS, sum'muns, s. A call by authority or the command of a superior to appear at a place named, or to attend to some public duty. In Law, a citation to appear in court, or a written notification signed by the proper officer, warning him to appear in court at a day specified, to answer to the demand of the plaintiff. Summons ad warrantizandum, the process by which the vouchee in a common recovery was called to warranty.—Cowel.

SUMMUM BONUM—SUNBEAT.

SUMMUM BONUM, sum'mum bo'num, (Latin phrase) The chief good.

SUMOOM.—See Simoom.

SUMP, sump, s. A pond of water, reserved for works, &c. In Metallurgy, a round pit of a lined with clay, to receive the metal on its fusion. In Mining, a pit sunk below the bottom of the mine.

SUMPH, sumf, s. (sumpf, Germ.) A dunce; a blunt fellow.—Local; common in Scotland, as sumphish.

SUMPTER, sump'tur, s. (sommier, Fr. somara, It.) A horse which carries clothes or furniture; a gage-horse; usually called a pack-horse.

The sign or representation of any moral thing by the images or properties of natural things; thus, the lion is the symbol of courage, the lamb of meekness or patience; an emblem or type of something else, as the bread and wine in the eucharist are called the symbols of the body and blood of Christ; a letter or character which is significant, as the letters of the Chinese alphabet: the symbols of algebra are arbitrary; a certain mark or figure representing a being or thing, a sign or badge, as a trident is the symbol of Neptune, the peacock of Juno, &c.; a compendium; an abstract; sentence of adjudication.—Not used in this sense.

The persons who are to be judged * * * shall all appear to receive their symbol.—Ep. Taylor.

SYMBOLANTHUS, sim-bo-lan'thus, s. (symbolon, a ring, Gr. in reference to the ring at the base of the filaments.) A genus of plants: Order, Gentianaceae.

SYMBOLIC—SYMPATHETICAL.

SYMBOLIC, sim-bol'ik, } a. Representative; SYMBOLICAL, sim-bol'e-kal, } expressing by resemblance or signs; typical. Symbolical philo- sophy, is the philosophy expressed by hieroglyphics.

SYMBOLICALLY, sim-bol'e-kal-le, ad. By representation or resemblance of properties; by signs; typically.

SYMBOLISM, sim-bol-izm, s. In Chemistry, a union in things thrown together; consent of parts: this is a literal meaning.

SYMBOLIZATION, sim-bol-e-za'shun, s. (from Symbolize.) The act of symbolizing, resemblance in properties.

SYMBOLIZE, sim-bol-ize, v. n. (symboliser, Fr.) To have a typical resemblance; to have a resemblance of qualities or properties;—v. a. to make to agree in properties; to make representative of something.

SYMMETRICAL, sim-me-tral, a. (see Symmetry.)
 Commensurable.—Literal, but obsolete.

It was both the doctrine of the apostles, and the practice of the church, while it was symmetrical, to obey the magistrate.—More (1660).

SYMMETRIAN, sim-met're-an, } s. One eminently SYMMETRIST, sim-met-ris-t, } studious of proportion or symmetry of parts.

His face was a thought longer than the exact sym- metrians would allow.—Sidney.

SYMMETRICAL, sim-met're-kal, a. Proportional throughout the parts; made up of parts agreeing to each other. In Botany, flowers are symmetrical, when the segments of the calyx, the petals, and the stamens, are regular, equal, and alike.— Lindley. In Geometry, symmetrical solids, those which, although equal and similar, cannot be brought to coincide with each other, or occupy the same portion of space: a man's two hands afford a familiar example. The equality of plane figures is proved by showing that they may be made to coincide, but it is evident that this mode of proof cannot be extended to all solids.

SYMMETRICALLY, sim-met're-kal-le, ad. With due proportion of parts.

SYMMETRIZE, sim-met-rize, v. a. To make proportional in its parts; to reduce to symmetry.

SYMMETRY, sim-met-re, s. (symmetria, from syn, and metron, measure, Gr. symmetric, Fr.) Agreement of one part to another; adaptation of parts; the union and conformity of the members of a work to the whole. Symmetry arises from the proportion which the Greeks call analogy, which is the relation of conformity of all the parts to a certain measure.

SYMPATHETIC, sim-pa-thet'ik, } a. (sympa- SYMPATHETICAL, sim-pa-thet'e-kal, } thique, Fr.)

 Pertaining to sympathy; having common feeling with another; susceptible of being affected with feelings like those of another; or of feelings in consequence of what another feels. Among Alchemists, the epithet was applied to a kind of powder, said to be possessed of the wonderful property, that if spread on a cloth dipped in the blood of a wound, the wound would be healed, even in the absence of the patient. Sympathetic ink, an ink which makes no mark upon the paper until it is heated, exposed to the action of light, or until a second fluid is passed over it. thus, writing is invisible, with a weak solution of galls, till heated; with solution of a salt of gold or silver, till exposed to the light of the sun; with a weak solution of galls, or of prussiate of potash, till wetted with a solution of sulphate of iron. In Anatomy, sympa- thetic nerve, the intercostal nerve; a nerve consisting of filaments from every nerve; so called from its being supposed to produce a sympathy between the affections of different parts. In Pathology, the term sympathetic is applied to symptoms and affections which occur in parts more or less remote from the seat of the disease, and are occasioned by some nervous connection of the parts.

SYMPATHETICALLY, sim-pa-thet'e-kal-le, ad. With sympathy or common feeling; in consequence of sympathy; by communication from something else.

SYMPATHIZE, sim-pa-thize, v. n. To have a common feeling, as of bodily pleasure or pain; to feel in consequence of what another feels; to feel mutually; by a forced figure, to agree or fit.—Not used in this sense.

Blue and yellow are two colours which sympathize.—
Dryden.

SYMPATHY, sim-pa-the, s. (sympatheia, from syn, and pathos, passion, feeling, Gr.) Fellow-feeling; the quality of being affected by the affection of another, with feelings correspondent in kind, if not in degree; a conformity of affections, inclinations, or natural temperament, which makes two persons pleased with each other; a propension of inanimate things to unite or to act on each other, as the sympathy between the magnet and iron. In Physiology, the relation which exists between the actions of two or more organs, contiguously or remotely situated.

SYMPHONIA, sim-fo-ne-a, s. (syn, and phone, sound, Gr.) In Antiquity, a pulsatile musical instrument made of a hollow piece of wood closed at each end with leather, and struck with a stick.

SYMPHONIOUS, sim-fo-ne-us, a. (from Symphony.)
 Agreeing in sound; accordant; harmonious.

Up he rode,
 Followed with acclamation and the sound
Symphonious of ten thousand harps, that tuned Angelic harmonies.—Milton.

SYMPHONIST, sim-fo-nist, s. A composer of symphonies or instrumental music.

SYMPHONY, sim-fo-ne, s. (symphonia, Lat. sym- phonie, Fr. symphonia, from syn, and phone, voice, sound, Gr.) A consonance or harmony of sounds, agreeable to the ear, whether the sounds be vocal or instrumental, or both; a full concert; an overture or other composition for instruments.

SYMPHYNOTA, sim-fe-no'ta, s. A name proposed for a genus of fresh water Bivalves, allied to Ano- donta: Family, Naiadae.

SYMPHYSIOTOMY, sim-fi-se-ot'o-me, s. (symphysis and tome, incision, Gr.) In Surgery, the operation of dividing the symphysis pubis.

SYMPHYSIS, sim-fe-sis, s. (syn, and phyo, I grow, Gr.) In Anatomy, the growing together, or connection of bones, which have no manifest motion, as the symphysis pubis. In Pathology, a coalescence of a natural passage; also, the first intention of cure in a wound.

SYMPHYTUM, sim-fe-tum, s. (symphysis, a union or junction, from its long supposed virtues as a vulnery.) Comfrey, a genus of plants: Order, Boraginaceae.

SYMPIESOMETER, sim-pi-e-zom'e-tur, s. (sympiezo, I compress, and metron, a measure, Gr.) An instrument for measuring the weight of the atmosphere by the compression of a column of gas.

SYZYGY, siz'e-je, s. (syzygia, from syn, and sygōo, I join, Gr.) The conjunction or opposition of a planet with the sun or of any two heavenly bodies: the quadratures are precisely the intermediate positions.

T.

T, the twentieth letter of the English alphabet, and a close consonant. By itself it has one sound only, as in take, turn, but: so we are accustomed to speak, but in reality, t can scarcely be said to have any sound at all: its use, like that of all mute articulations, is to modify the manner of uttering the vocal sound which precedes or follows it. When t is followed by h, as in think and that, the combination forms a distinct sound, for which we have no single character: this combination has two sounds in English—aspirated, as in think, and vocal, as in that. The letters ti, before a vowel, and unaccented, usually pass into the sound of sh, as in nation, substantiate. In a few words, ti has the sound of the English ch, as in christian, question. T is convertible with d—thus, the Germans write tag, where we write day, and gut for good: it is also convertible with s and z, for the Germans write wasser for water, and zahn for tame. T, as an abbreviation, stands for theologia, as S. T. D., sanctus theologiae doctor, doctor of divinity. In ancient monuments and writings, T stands for

TAAUTES—TABANUS.

Titus, Titius, Tullius, &c. As a numeral among the Latins, it stood for 160; and with a dash over the top T̄, for 160,000. In Law, T is the letter with which every person convicted of theft or other felony, save murder, and admitted to the benefit of clergy, was formerly branded upon the brawn of his thumb.—4 Henry VII., c. 13. In Music, T signifies tenor; also tace, to indicate silence; and, in concerts, it is also the sign of tutti, a direction for the whole band to play after a solo. It sometimes also stands for trillo, a shake. In the Arts, it is used as a word to denote things in the form of this letter as a capital: thus, we say a T square, the T piece of a Stanhope press, a T bandage, the T palace at Mantua, &c.

TAAUTES, tay-aw'tes, s. In Mythology, a Phœnician deity, the same as the Saturn of the Latins.

TABANIDÆ, ta-ban'e-de, s. (tabanus, one of the genera.) A family of Dipterous insects.

TABANUS, ta-ba'nus, s. (meaning unknown to us.) A genus of Dipterous insects: Type of the family Tabanidae.

TABARD—TABES.

TABARD, tab'ard, s. (tabar, Welsh, tabarra, Ital.) A sort of tunic or mantle, covering the body before and behind, reaching below the loins, but open at the sides from the shoulders downward: an ordinary article of dress in England and France in the middle ages, worn by heralds.

TABARDER, tab'ard-ur, s. One who wears a tabard.

TABASHEER, tab'a-sheer, s. (Persian.) A light, white, porous substance, found in the joints of the bamboo: it consists almost entirely of silica.

TABBY, tab'be, s. (tabis, Fr. tabi, Ital. Span. and Port. taftas, taffeta, Armor.) A kind of waved silk, usually watered: it is manufactured like taffeta, but is thicker and stronger; the watering is given to it by the calender. The name is also applied to a mixture of lime with shells, gravel, or stones, in equal proportions, with an equal proportion of water, which, when dry, becomes as hard as a rock. In Morocco, this is used instead of bricks for the walls of buildings;—a. diversified in colour; brindled, as a tabby cat;—v. a. to water, or cause to look wavy, as, to tabby silk.

TABBYING, tab'be-ing, s. The process of giving stuffs a wavy appearance in the calender, like that given to tabby,—called also watering.

TABEFACTION, tab-e-fak'shun, s. (from tabeo, I waste, and facio, I make, Lat.) A wasting away; a gradual losing of flesh by disease.

TABEFY, tab'e-fi, v. n. To consume; to waste gradually; to lose flesh.

TABELLION, ta-bel'le-un, s. (from tabula, a tablet, Lat. in reference to the tablets on which they wrote.) In the Roman empire, the name given to officers who had charge of public documents; they were also secretaries or registrars, and in some cases judges.

TABERN.—See Tabard.

TABERN, tab'ern, s. (taberna, a shop or shed, Lat.) In Architecture, a provincial term for a cellar.

TABERNACLE, tab'er-na-kl, s. (tabernaculum, a tent, Lat.) Originally, a tent or temporary habitation; among the Jews, a movable building, so contrived as to be taken to pieces with ease and reconstructed, for the convenience of being carried during the wanderings of the Israelites in the wilderness: it was of a rectangular figure, thirty cubits long, ten broad, and ten high; the interior was divided into two rooms by a veil or curtain, and it was covered with four different spreads or carpets: the name is also applied to the temple; a place of worship; a sacred place; our natural body;

If our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.—2 Cor. v. 1.

God's gracious presence, or the tokens of it;

Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them.—Rev. xxi. 3.

In Roman Catholic churches, a small representation of an edifice placed on the altar for containing consecrated vessels;—v. n. to dwell; to reside for a time; to be housed.

TABERNACULAR, tab'er-nak'u-lar, a. Latticed.

The sides of every street were covered with cloisters—fronted with tabernacular or open work.—Warton.

TABERNEMONTANA, tab'er-ne-mon-ta'na, s. (in honour of James Theodore, surnamed Tabernemontanus, from the place where he was born: he died in 1590.) A genus of plants: Order, Apocynaceæ.

TABES, ta'biz, s. (Latin.) In Pathology, a wasting away of the body; emaciation; atrophy.

TABETIC—TABLE.

TABETIC, ta-bet'ik, a. (tabide, Fr. tabidus, from tabid, tab'id, } tabeo, I waste, Lat.) Wasted by disease; affected with tabes.

In tabid persons, milk is the best restorative.—Arbuthnot.

TABIDNESS, tab'id-nes, s. The state of being wasted by disease.

TABITUDE, tab'e-tude, s. The state of one affected with tabes.

TABLATURE, tab'la-ture, s. (from Table.) Painting on walls and ceilings; a single piece comprehended in one view, and formed according to one design. In Anatomy, a division or parting of the skull into two tables. In Music, the use of the letters of the alphabet, or any other character, for expressing the notes or sounds of a composition.

TABLE, ta'bl, s. (French, from tabula, Lat.) A flat surface of some extent, or a thing that has a flat surface, as a table of marble; an article of furniture, consisting essentially of a flat surface of wood or other material placed on legs or supports, and used for a great variety of purposes, as for holding dishes of meat, for writing on, &c. Among workmen, tables receive different names, as, card-table, dining-table, loo-table, pembroke-table, tea-table, turn-over-table, &c.; fare or entertainment of provisions, as, to keep a good table; the persons sitting at table, or partaking of entertainment;

Give me some wine, fill full,

I drink to th' general joy of the whole table.—Shaks.

a tablet or surface on which anything is written or engraved, as the two tables of stone on which the ten commandments were written; a picture, or anything that exhibits a view on a flat surface; the palm of the hand;

Mistress of a fairer table,

Hath not history nor table.—Ben Jonson.

an index; a collection of heads or principal matters contained in a book; a syllabus; a synopsis; many particulars brought into one view. In Anatomy, a division of the cranium or skull, which consists of two tables or laminae, with a cellular structure between them. In Architecture, a smooth, simple member of various forms, most usually in that of an oblong parallelogram. Corbel table, a row of corbels supporting an overhanging cornice, parapet, &c., very common in the Norman buildings. Water-table, an inclined plane where a wall sets off to a smaller projection, for the purpose of throwing off the water: principally used in buttresses and other parts of Gothic edifices. Among Christians, the Table, or the Lord's Table, the sacrament, or holy communion of the Lord's supper; an altar;

Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar; and ye say, wherein have we polluted thee? In that ye say, the table of the Lord is contemptible.—Mal. i. 7.

a division of the ten commandments, as the first and second tables. In Glass manufacture, a circular plate of window glass, being the original form in which it is cast. Among Jewellers, table-diamond, or other precious stone, whose upper surface is quite flat, and the sides cut in angles. In Law, table-rents, rents paid to bishops and others, reserved and appropriated to their table or house-keeping.—Cowel. Table-money, an allowance to flag-officers in addition to their pay, as a compensation for the necessary expenses to which they are put in furnishing their tables. In Mathematics, Astronomy, and Science in general, tables

TAYLOR'S THEOREM, ta'lurs the'o-rem, s. In Mathematics, a very general and remarkable formula of most extensive application in analysis, discovered by Dr. B. Taylor, and given in his Methodus Incre-mentorum. The formula is this:—Let u be what u becomes when x receives an increment = h; then

$$u' = u + \frac{du}{dx} h + \frac{d^2u}{dx^2} \frac{h^2}{1.2} + \frac{d^3u}{dx^3} \frac{h^3}{1.2.3} + \&c.$$

 Demonstrations of this important theorem are given in every treatise on the differential calculus; and it is made by Lagrange the foundation of the calculus itself.

to discern;—r. n. to give an account; to make report; to take effect, as, every shot tells; to produce some effect. To tell of or on, to inform.
Tell-tale, telling tales; babbling; one who officiously communicates information of the private concerns of individuals; one who tells that which prudence should suppress. In Music, a movable piece of ivory or lead, suspended in the front of a chamber organ, to indicate the degree of exhaustion of the wind. In Nautical affairs, the dial plate at the wheel, showing the position of the tiller.

TELLER, tel'ur, s. One who tells; one who numbers, as in counting votes in parliament; an officer or clerk in a bank employed to receive and pay money. In the Court of Exchequer, an officer, of which there are or were four, the business of whom is to receive and pay all monies due to the king, and to give the clerk of the pell a bill to charge him therewith. The tellers also pay persons to whom money is due by the king, by warrant from the auditor of the receipt; they also make books of receipts and payments, which they deliver to the lord-steward. This name is supposed to be from tally: the words of the bill by the auditors, clerks, and in ancient records, was written tallier.

TELLIMA, tel'le-ma, s. (an anagram of Metella, because separated from it.) A genus of plants:
 Order, Saxifragaceae.

TELLINA, tel-li'na, s. (telline, a species of mussel, Gr.) A genus of Mollusca, type of the subfamily Tellininae, the shells of which are transverse, greatly compressed, and nearly equilateral; the valves, on the inferior ligament or anterior side, sinuated and angulated; cardinal teeth $\frac{2}{3}$ or $\frac{1}{2}$; lateral teeth $\frac{2}{3}$, remote from the cardinal.

TELLINIDÆ, tel-lin'e-de, s. A family of solid and close bivalve Mollusca, of which Tellina is the type.
 The shells of this family are equivalve, with the margins thickened and solid; rarely covered with an epidermis; cardinal and lateral teeth well developed.

colour, and insoluble in all liquids. Formula, Te O₃.

TELLURIDE, tel'lu-ride, s. A compound of tellurous acid with a salifiable base.

TELLURION, tel-lu're-un, s. (tellus, the earth, Lat.)
 An instrument for showing the effect of the earth's motions and the obliquity of her axis—the one occasioning the seasons, the other the succession of day and night.

TELLURIUM, tel-lu're-um, s. (from tellus, the earth, Lat. in reference to the source from which the metal is procured.) A rare metal, hitherto found only in the mines of Transylvania, and even there in very small quantity. It has a tin-white colour, turning into lead-grey; a strong metallic lustre, and lamellated texture. It is very brittle, and its density is 6.2578. It fuses at a temperature below redness, and at a red heat it is volatile. Equiv.
 64 2. Symb. Te.

TELLUROUS ACID, tel'lu-rus as'id, s. (called also oxide of tellurium.) An acid which, in many of its properties, closely resembles the titanous and other feeble acids. Formula, Te O₂.

TELOPHONUS, tel-of-o-nus, s. (telaios, perfect, and phone, a sound, Gr.) A genus of birds: Family, Laniadæ.

TEMACHIS, tem'a-kis, s. (temache, a piece, Gr.) An obsolete name for a soft kind of gypsum of a bright glittering hue.

TEMERA, te'mer-a, s. A genus of fishes, with the general form of the Torpedo, but destitute of dorsal fins: Family, Raidæ.

 equivalent to two carubes, or 29 aspers, or about 1s. 5d. sterling.

TEMNURUS, tem-nu'rus, s. (temno, I cut, and ouros, a tail, Gr.) A genus of birds: Family, Trogonæ.

TEMONES, te-mo'nis, s. (temnos, Gr.) In ancient Architecture, the places in a temple where statues were placed.

TEMPER, tem'pur, v. a. (tempero, I mix or moderate, Lat. temperare, Ital. temperer, Fr.) To mix, so that one part qualifies the other; to bring to a moderate state, as to temper justice with mercy; to compound; to form by mixture; to qualify, as by an ingredient; to mix, unite, or combine two or more things, so as to reduce the excess of the qualities of either, and bring the whole to a desired consistence;

*If you could find out but a man
 To bear a poison, I could temper it.—Shaks.*

to unite in due proportion; to render symmetrical;
 God hath tempered the body together.—1 Cor. xii. 24.
 to accommodate; to modify; to soften; to mollify;

TEMPERAMENT—TEMPERING.

In Music, to modify or amend a false or imperfect note, by transferring to it a part of the beauty of a perfect one, that is, by dividing the tones. In the Arts, to alter the existing degree of elasticity of metals. This is commonly performed by heating the metal to redness, then suddenly cooling it, in which state it is at its greatest degree of hardness or brittleness; it is afterwards heated less or more, as it is required, to reduce it from this point;—s. due mixture of contrary qualities, or the state of any compound substance, which results from a mixture of ingredients; constitution of body; disposition of mind; constitution of mind; calmness of mind; moderation; heat of mind or passion, as, he showed a good deal of temper when I reproved him; the state of a metal, particularly as to its hardness; middle course; mean or medium. In Sugar Works, lime or other substance stirred into a clarifier filled with cane-juice, to neutralize the superabundant acid.

TEMPERAMENT, tem-per-a-ment, s. (French; temperamentum, Lat.) Constitution; state with respect to the predominance of any quality; medium; due mixture of different qualities. In Music, the adjusting of the imperfect concords in instruments whose sounds are fixed, so as to transfer to them part of the music of perfect concords.

TEMPERAMENTAL, tem-per-a-ment'al, a. Constitutional.—Little used.

TEMPERANCE, tem-per-ans, s. (French; temperantia, Lat.) Moderation; particularly, habitual moderation in regard to the indulgence of the natural appetites and passions; restrained or moderate indulgence; patience; calmness; sedateness; moderation of passion.

What, are you chafed?

Ask God for temperance, that's the appliance only which your disease requires.—Shaks.

TEMPERATE, tem-per-ate, a. (temperatus, Lat.) Moderate; not excessive; moderate in the indulgence of the appetites and passions; cool; calm; not violent; proceeding from temperance; free from ardent passion. Temperate zone, the space of the earth's surface comprehended between the tropics and the polar circles, where the temperature is lower than within the tropics, and higher than in the polar regions.

TEMPERATELY, tem-per-ate-ly, ad. Moderately; calmly; without violence of passion; with moderate force.

TEMPERATENESS, tem-per-ate-ness, s. Moderation; freedom from excess; calmness; coolness of mind.

TEMPERATIVE, tem-per-ay-tiv, a. Having the power or quality of tempering.

TEMPERATURE, tem-per-ay-ture, s. (French; temperatura, Lat.) In Physics, the state of a body with regard to heat or cold, as indicated by the thermometer; or the degree of free caloric which a body possesses when compared with other bodies; constitution; state; degree of any quality; freedom from immoderate passions.

In that proud port which her so goodly graceth,

Most goodly temperature you may descry.—Spenser.

TEMPERED, tem-per'd, a. Disposed, as a good-tempered person; having a proper degree of hardness or elasticity.

The tempered metals clash and yield a silver sound.—Dryden.

TEMPERING, tem-per-ing, s. In Metallurgy, the preparing of iron, steel, or other metal, so as to render it harder or softer as may be required.

THELEPHORA, the-lef'o-ra, s. (thele, a nipple, and phoreo, I bear, Gr.) A genus of Fungi: Tribe, Hymenomycetes.

THELICONTUS, the-lik'o-nus, s. (thele, a teat, Gr. and contus.) A genus of Mollusca, belonging to the Conina, or Cones; the shell narrow, nearly cylindrical, generally grooved transversely; spire elevated, thick, concave, obtuse; aperture linear: Family, Strombidæ.

THELIDDERMA, the-le-der'ma, s. (thele, a nipple, and derma, skin, Gr.) A genus of fresh-water Mollusca, belonging to the Unionina, or Unios, the shell of which has the posterior hinge margin elevated and winged; the surface of the valves tuberculated; cardinal and lateral teeth perfect.

THELIDOMUS, thel-id'o-mus, s. (thel, a nipple, and domos, a house, Gr.) A genus of Mollusca, belonging to the Rotellinae, of which the univalve shell is turbinate and subtrichiform; the umbilicus large and open; the whole shell entirely composed of grains of sand.

THELODUS, thel'o-dus, s. (thel, a nipple, and odous, a tooth, Gr.) A genus of fossil Fishes, from the upper Silurian strata of Ludlow.

THELOTREMA, the-lo-tre'ma, s. (thel, a nipple, and trema, an orifice, Gr.) A genus of Lichens: Tribe, Ctenothalamini.

THELPHUSA, thel-fu'za, s. (thel, a nipple, and phusao, I breathe, Gr.) A genus of Crabs, all the known species of which live in the earth near the shore. It forms the type of the tribe Thelphusians of M. Milne Edwards.

THELPHUSIANS, thel-fu'ze-ans, s. The name of a tribe of Brachyurous Crustaceans, of which Thelphusa is the type. Its other genera are Boscia and Trichodactylus.

THELYGONUM, the-lig'o-num, s. (thelys, a woman, and gony, a knee, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Urticaceae.

THELYPHONUS, the-lif'o-nus, s. (thelys, a female, and phone, a sound, Gr.) A genus of Arachnides, or Spiders: Family, Phryneidae.

THELYRA, the-li'ra, s. (meaning unknown.) A genus of plants, natives of Madagascar: Order, Chrysobalanaceae.

THEM, them, pron. The objective case of they, and of both genders. It is vulgarly used as an adjective, as them books.

THEME, theme, s. (thema, Lat. and Gr.) A subject or topic on which a person writes or speaks; a short dissertation composed by a student. In Grammar, the original word from which the inflections or the derivations spring. In Music, a series of notes selected as the text or subject of a new composition.

THEMIS, the-mis, s. (Greek.) In Greek Mythology, the goddess of Law. She was one of the Titans, and bore to Jupiter, Peace, Order, Justice, the Fates, and the Seasons.

THEMISTO, the-mis'to, s. (themistos, proper, lawful, Gr.) A genus of Amphipodous Crustaceans, placed by M. Milne Edwards in the second tribe of his family Hyperinae.

THEMSELVES, them-selv's, pron. The reciprocal form of they and them.

THEN, then, ad. (thanne, Sax. and Goth.) At that time, referring to a time specified, either past or future; afterward; soon afterward, or immediately; in that case; in consequence; therefore; for this reason; at another time, as now and then; at one time and another; that time.

Till then, who knew
The force of those dire arms.—Milton.

THENARDIA, the-nard'e-a, s. (in honour of L. J. Thenard, author of a treatise on the chemical physiology of plants.) A genus of plants: Order, Apocynaceae.

THENARDITE, then-ar-dite, s. In Mineralogy, a substance that occurs in crystalline coatings at the bottom of certain lakes, at a place near Madrid, where it is collected for the manufacture of artificial subcarbonate of soda; colour white or reddish; transparent or translucent; superficially efflorescent; soluble in water. Composition—sulphate of soda, 99.78; subcarbonate of soda, 0.22: sp. gr. 2.73.

THENARD'S BLUE, then'ards bloo, s. Cobalt blue, a pigment, of which arseniate or phosphate of cobalt and alumina are the bases.

THENCE, thens, ad. (thanen, Sax.) From that place; from that time; for that reason.

THENCEFORTH, thens'forth, ad. (thence and forth.) From that time.

THENCEFORWARD, thens-for'ward, ad. From that time onward.

THENCEFROM, thens'from, ad. From that place.

THENUS, the'nus, s. (theino, I wound, Gr.) A genus of Macrurous Crustaceans, separated from Scyllarus by Dr. Leach.

THEOBROMA, the-o-bro'ma, s. (Theos, God, and broma, food, Gr. in allusion to the excellent nature of its produce.) Chocolate Nut, a genus of plants: Order, Byttneriaceae.

THEOBROMINE, the-o-bro'mine, s. A substance very similar to caffeine, discovered by Woskresensky in the seeds of Theobroma cacao, which yields chocolate and cocoa. Formula, $\text{C}_{10}\text{H}_5\text{N}_3\text{O}_2$.

THEOCRACY, the-ok'ra-se, s. (Theos, God, and kratos, I rule, Gr.) The government of a state immediately by God; the state thus governed. Applied only to the constitution of the Israelitish government.

THEOCRASY, the-ok'ra-se, s. (Theos, God, and krasis, mixture, Gr.) In Ancient Philosophy, the intimate union of the soul with God in contemplation, which was considered attainable by the newer Platonists. Similar ideas are entertained by the philosophers of India, and by many religious sects.

THEOCRATIC, the-o-krat'ik, a. (from Theo and kratos.) Pertaining to Theocracy; administered by the immediate direction of God.

THEODAN, the'o-dan, s. In English History, a person of a rank immediately inferior to that of a thane; one who held lands of a subject, as opposed to one who held them of the crown. In the degrees or distinctions of persons among the Saxons, the earl or prime lord was called thane, and the king's thane; and the husbandman or inferior tenant was called theodan, or under thane.—Cord.

THEODICY, the-od'e-se, s. (Theos, God, Gr. and dico, I speak, Lat.) The science of God; metaphysical theology.

THEODOLITE, the-od'o-lite, s. (theo, I run, and dolichos, long, Gr.) In Surveying, an instrument for measuring the angular distances between objects projected on the plane of the horizon: for this purpose, it is the most perfect instrument yet constructed.

THEODOSIAN, the-o-do'zhe-an, s. A disciple of Theodosius, a learned tanner of Byzantium, in the latter part of the second century. He is supposed to be the first who adopted the tenets avowed in modern times by the Socinians;—a. pertaining to Theodosius. In History, applied particularly to an important code of laws promulgated in the Eastern Roman empire, A.D. 438, under the auspices of Theodosius II.

THEODOXIS, the-o-doks'is, s. (theodoxis, the glory of God, Gr.) A name given by Montfort for a division of the genus Nerita, the type of which is Nerita fluviatilis: syn. Theodoxis luteolus.

THEOGONIST—THEOPASCHITES.

THEOGONIST, the-og'o-nist, s. (from Theogony.) A writer on theogony.

THEOGONY, the-og'o-ne, s. (Theos, God, and gonos, generation, Gr.) In Antiquity, the branch of religion and literature which taught the history of the descents and relationships, or, in other words, the genealogies of the various gods who were the objects of popular worship.

THEOLOGASTER, the-ol'o-gas-tur, s. A kind of quack in divinity, as a quack in medicine is called a medicaster.

THEOLOGER, the-ol'o-jur, s. A theologian.—Unusual.

You say the theologers think to save themselves.—Wallis.

THEOLOGIAN, the-o-lo'je-an, s. (from Theology.) A divine; a person well versed in theology; a professor of divinity.

THEOLOGICAL, the-o-loj'e-kal, } divinity, or the science of God and of divine things.

THEOLOGICALLY, the-o-loj'e-kal-le, ad. According to the principles of theology.

THEOLOGIST, the-ol'o-jist, s. A theologian.

THEOLOGIUM, the-o-lo'je-um, s. In Antiquity, a small upper stage in the theatre, upon which the machinery of the gods was arranged.

THEOLOGIZE, the-ol'o-jize, v. a. To render theological;—v. n. to frame a system of theology.

THEOLOGIZER, the-ol'o-ji-zur, s. A theologist.—Unusual.

THEOLOGUE, the'o-loge, s. A theologist.—Obsolete.

A theologus more by need than genial bent.—Dryden.

THEOLOGY, the-ol'o-je, s. (theologie, Fr. Theos, God, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) Divinity; the science which teaches the existence, character, and attributes of God, his laws and government, the doctrines we are to believe, and the duties we are to practice. Moral theology teaches us the divine laws relating to our manners and actions, that is, our moral duties. Scholastic theology is that which proceeds from reasoning, or which derives the knowledge of several divine things from certain established principles of faith. Speculative theology teaches or explains the doctrines of religion as objects of faith.

THEOMACHIST, the-om'a-kist, s. (Theos, God, and mache, combat, Gr.) One who fights against the gods.

THEOMACHY, the-om'a-ke, s. A fighting against the gods, as the battle of the giants with the gods; opposition to the divine will.

THEOMANCY, the'o-man-se, s. (Theos, God, and manteia, divination, Gr.) In Mythology, divination drawn from the responses of oracles, in which a god was supposed himself to answer the inquirer; or from the predictions of sibyls and others, regarded as being immediately inspired by some divinity.

THEONOA, the-o-no'a, s. A name given by Lamaroux to a genus of fossil Zoophytes, from the secondary and tertiary strata.

THEOPASCHITES, the-o-pas'kitse, s. (Theos, God, and pascho, I suffer, Gr.) In Ecclesiastical History, a name given to certain heretics of the fifth century, followers of Peter the Fuller, who were charged with holding the doctrine, that all the three persons of the Godhead were crucified.

THEOPATHETIC—THEORICON.

THEOPATHETIC, the-o-pa-thet'ik, a. (from Theopathy.) Pertaining to theopathy.

THEOPATHY, the-op'a-the, s. (Theos, God, and pathos, passion, Gr.) Religions suffering; suffering for the purpose of subduing sinful propensities.

THEOPHANIA, the-o-fa'ne-a, s. (Greek.) In Mythology, festivals celebrated at Delphi in honour of Apollo.

THEOPHANY, the-of'a-ne, s. (Theos, God, and phainomai, I appear, Gr.) A word used by some writers to signify the manifestations of God to man by actual appearance.

THEOPHILANTHROPISTS, the-o-fil-an'thro-pists, s. (Theos, God, and philanthropos, a lover of men, Gr.) The name assumed by a society of Deists, formed at Paris during the first French Revolution. They were granted the use of ten parish churches in Paris by the Directory, but ceased to exist as a body in 1802, when they were forbidden the use of these places of worship by the consuls, the attempt of these philosophical sectarians to supplant Christianity being thus unsuccessful.

THEOPHRASTA, the-o-fras'ta, s. (in memory of Theophrastus, the father of natural history.) A genus of plants: Order, Myrsinaceae.

THEOPHRASTACEÆ.—See Myrsinaceae.

THEORBO, the-awr'bo, s. (tiorb, Ital.) In Music, a kind of lute of large dimensions, sometimes called the arch-lute, and formerly used for striking the chords of thorough-bass in accompaniments.

THEOREM, the'o-rem, s. (theoreme, Fr. theorem, from theoreo, Gr.) In Mathematics, a proposition which terminates in theory, and which considers the properties of things already made or done: a theorem is something to be proved, a problem is something to be done. In Algebra, or Analysis, it is sometimes used to denote a rule, particularly when that rule is expressed by symbols, as the binomial theorem. A universal theorem extends to any quantity without restriction. A particular theorem extends only to a particular quantity. A negative theorem expresses the impossibility of any assertion. A local theorem is that which relates to a surface. A solid theorem is that which considers a space terminated by a solid; that is, by any of the three conic sections.

THEOREMATIC, the-o-rem-at'ik, } a. Per-THEOREMATICAL, the-o-rem-at'e-kal, } taining to THEOREMIC, the-o-rem'ik, } a theo-

THEORETICAL, the-o-ret'e-kal, } Pertaining to theory; depending on theory or speculation; terminating in theory; speculative; not practical.

THEORETICALLY, the-o-ret'e-kal-le, ad. In or by theory; speculatively; not practically.

THEORIC, the'o-rik, s. Speculation; not practice;

The bookish theoric,
Wherein the togged consuls can propose
As masterly as he; mere prattle, without practice, Is all his soldiership.—Shaks.

—a. theoretic.—Obsolete.

THEORICALLY, the-or'e-kal-le, ad. Theoretically.—Obsolete.

Able to discourse theorically.—Boyle.

THEORICON, the-or'e-kon, s. In ancient Attic History, the name given to that portion of the public revenue which was reserved for the purpose of theatrical representations.

THEORIST, the'o-ris't, } s. One who forms theo-THEORIZER, the'o-ri-zur, } ries; one given to theory and speculation.

THEORIZE, the'o-rize, v. n. To form a theory or theories; to speculate.

THEORY, the'o-re, s. (theorie, Fr. theoria, from theoreo, I see or contemplate, Gr.) Speculation; a doctrine or scheme of things which terminates in speculation or contemplation without a view to practice; an exposition of the general principles of any science; the science as distinguished from the art; the philosophical explanation of phenomena, either physical or moral. A theory is founded on inferences drawn from principles which have been established by evidence; a hypothesis is a proposition assumed to account for certain phenomena, and has no other evidence of its truth than that it affords a satisfactory explanation of those phenomena.

THEOSOPHIC, the-o-sof'ik, } a. (see Theoso-THEOSOPHICAL, the-o-sof'e-kal, } phy.) Pertaining to Theosophy, or to Theosophists; divinely wise.

THEOSOPHISM, the-os'o-fizm, s. Pretension to divine illumination; enthusiasm.

THEOSOPHIST, the-os'o-fist, s. One who pretends to divine illumination; one who pretends to derive his knowledge from divine revelation.

THEOSOPHIZE, the-os'o-fize, v. n. To treat of God or of divine things.

THEOSOPHY, the-os'o-fe, s. (Theos, God, and sophos, wise, Gr.) Divine wisdom; godliness; knowledge of God.

THERESIA, the-pe'she-a, s. (theresios, divine, Gr. in allusion to its being planted about churches in warm countries.) A genus of plants; Order, Malvaceæ.

THERAPEUTÆ, ther-a-pu'te, s. (from therapeuo, to nurse, serve, or cure, Gr.) The contemplative sect of Essenes, and so called from applying themselves to the cure of the disorders of the soul, by retirement, self-denial, and devout contemplation.

THERAPEUTIC, ther-a-pu'tik, a. Curative, that pertains to the healing art.

THERAPEUTICS, ther-a-pu'tiks, s. That branch of Pathology which has for its especial object the treatment of diseases.

THERAPHIN.—See Teraphim.

THERAPON, ther'-a-pon, s. (Greek, a servant or attendant.) A genus of fishes, of the subfamily Datnina, distinguished by having strong spines on the preoperculum: Family, Percidæ.

THERE, thayr, ad. (thar, Sax. thar, Goth.) In that place: it is sometimes opposed to here, denoting the place most distant; it is sometimes used by way of exclamation, as, there, there! calling the attention to something distant; it is used to begin sentences, or before a verb.

There came a voice from heaven.—Mark i. 11.

In Composition, there has the sense of a pronoun as in the Saxon, as thereby, which signifies by that.

THEREABOUT, thayr'a-bowt, } ad. (there and THEREABOUTS, thayr'a-bowts, } about.) Near that place; near that number, degree, or quantity; concerning that.

As they were much perplexed thereabout.—Luke xxiv. 4.

THEREAFTER, thayr-af'tur, ad. According to that; accordingly; after that.

THEREAT, thayr-at', ad. At that place; on that account.

THEREBY, thayr-i in consequence

THEREFOR, thayr THEREFORE, thayr reason, referring consequently; in that.

THERMOGEN—THESMOPHORIA.

THERMOGEN, ther'mo-jen, s. (therme, heat, and genos, generation, Gr.) The elementary matter of heat; caloric.

THERMO LAMP, ther'mo lamp, s. An instrument for furnishing light by means of inflammable gas.

THERMOMETER, ther-mom'e-tur, s. (therme, heat, and metron, a measure, Gr.) An instrument for measuring heat, founded on the property which heat possesses of expanding all bodies, the rate or quantity of expansion being supposed proportional to the degree of heat applied, and hence indicating that degree. The thermometer indicates only the sensible heat of bodies, and gives no information respecting the quantity of latent heat, or of combined heat, which those bodies may contain. In the common thermometer, the degrees of temperature are measured by the contractions and expansions of a column of mercury, the heat of boiling and freezing water being regarded as two fixed points, and the space between them divided into a certain number of equal parts. The scale of Centigrade is reduced to that of Fahrenheit, by multiplying by 9, and dividing by 5: that of Reaumur to that of Fahrenheit, by dividing by 4 instead of 5: and that of Fahrenheit to either of these, by reversing the process.

THERMOMETRICAL, ther-mo-met're-kal, a. Pertaining to a thermometer; indicated by a thermometer.

THERMOMETRICALLY, ther-mo-met're-kal-le, ad. By means of a thermometer.

THERMOPHIS, ther-mop'is, s. (thermos, a lupine, and opsis, likeness, Gr. from the resemblance of the plants to lupines.) A genus of Leguminous plants: Suborder, Papilionaceæ.

THERMOSCOPE, ther'mo-skope, s. (therme, heat, and skopeo, I view, Gr.) The name given by Count Rumford to that modification of the air thermometer, called by Leslie a differential thermometer, being claimed by the Count as his own invention.

THERMOSTAT, ther'mo-stat, s. (therme, heat, and statos, standing, Gr.) An instrument depending upon the unequal expansion of metals by heat, for regulating temperature.

THESE, theez, pron. The plural of this. These is opposed to those, as this is to that; and when two persons or things, or collections of things, are named, these refers to the things or persons which are nearest in place or order, or which are last mentioned.

THESIS, the'sia, s. (Latin and Greek.) A position or proposition which a person advances and offers to maintain, or which is actually maintained by argument; a theme. In Logic, every proposition may be divided into thesis and hypothesis: thesis contains the thing affirmed or denied, hypothesis the conditions of the affirmation or negation. In Music, thesis is the unaccented part of the measure, which the Greeks expressed by a downward beat.

THESIUM, the'she-um, s. (said to be named after a plant called Thesicon by the Greeks, because it formed part of the garland which Theseus presented to Ariadne.) Bastard Toad Flax, a genus of plants: Order, Santalaceæ.

THESMOPHORIA, thes-mo-fo're-a, s. (Greek.) In Antiquity, a festival with mysteries in honour of Demeter, or Ceres, to whom all the institutions of civilized life, especially of civil and religious laws, were attributed.

THESMOTHETÆ—THEW.

THESMOTHETÆ, thes-mo-the'te, s. (Greek.) In Greek Antiquity, the six inferior archons at Athens, who presided at the election of the lower magistrates, received criminal informations in various matters, decided civil causes on arbitration, took the votes at elections, and performed a variety of other offices.

THESMOTHETE, thes'mo-theet, s. A lawgiver.

THESPIAN, thes'pe-an, a. Pertaining to Thespis, an Athenian, who lived in the first half of the sixth century, before Christ, and who is said to have introduced the first rudiments of a tragic stage—hence, the art of representing tragedy has been called the Thespian art.

THESSALIAN, thes-say'yan, a. Pertaining to or produced in Thessaly, a country of Greece, now called Janua;—s. an inhabitant of Thessaly.

THESSALONIAN, thes-sal-o'ne-an, a. Pertaining to Thessalonica in Macedonia;—s. an inhabitant of Thessalonica.

THETA, the'ta, s. The unlucky letter of the Greek alphabet; so called, because the judges, while balancing on a prisoner, used it to intimate their desire for his condemnation, from its being the first letter of thanatos, death.

THETES, the'tes, s. (Greek.) In ancient Attica, originally bondsmen, but, under the constitution of Solon, they became the lowest class of free citizens, who contributed nothing to the support of the state; and, as democratic opinions advanced, all restrictions on them were removed. They served generally as light-armed soldiers.

THETICAL, thet'e-kal, a. (thetikos, Gr.) Laid down.

This law — was merely thetical or positive, not indispensable and natural.—More.

THETIS, the'tis, s. (Greek.) In Mythology, one of the sea deities, daughter of Nereus and Doris. Among her children was Achilles, whom she rendered invulnerable by plunging him into the Styx. In Conchology, a genus of fossil shells, said to resemble Macra, but not to have the internal ligament. It has several acuminate, but no lateral teeth; therefore resembling Tellina, without the posterior plication.

THEURGIC, the-ur'jik, } a. (from Theurgy.)

THEURGICAL, the-ur'je-kal, } Pertaining to the power of performing supernatural things. Theurgic hymns, songs of incantation.

THEURGIST, the-ur-jist, s. One who pretends to theurgy, or who is addicted to it.

THEURGY, the-ur-je, s. (Theos, God, and ergon, work, Gr.) In Antiquity, the art of magic, which then, as in the middle ages, was deemed the result of an intercourse with, and influence over, spiritual beings of the more exalted class, as gods, demons, &c. In the more modern art of magic, it was that species which operated by celestial means; opposed to natural magic, which was effected by a knowledge of the occult powers of nature; and necromancy, or magic effected by the aid of evil spirits.

THEW, thu, s. (theaw, Sax.) Manner; habit; form of behaviour—(obsolete in these senses);

Home report these happy news,
For well ye worthy been for worth and gentle thews.—
Spenser.

muscle; sinew.

Will you tell me how to choose a man? Care I for the limbs, the thews, the stature, bulk, and semblance of a man? Give me the spirit, Master Shallow.—Shaks.

THEWED—THICKEN.

THEWED, thw'ed, a. Educated; habituated; accustomed.—Obsolete.

But he was wise and wary of her will,
And ever held his hand upon his heart;
Yet would not seem so rude and thewed ill,
As to depise so courteous seeming part.—Spenser.

THEY, they, pron. (thorge, Sax. thai, Goth.) The nominative plural of he, she, or it: it is never used adjectively, but always as a pronoun referring to persons, or as a substitute referring to things: it is used indefinitely, as, they say, that is, it is said by persons, indefinitely.

THIA, thi'a, s. In Mythology, a daughter of Uranus and Terra: she married her brother Hyperion, by whom she had the Sun, the Moon, Aurora, &c.; she is also called Thia, Titaa, Rhea, Tethys, &c. In Botany, a name given by Dr. Leach to a genus of very small burrowing Crustaceans, natives of the British Channel and the Mediterranean. It is placed by M. Milne Edwards in his family Oxytomes.

THIBEL, thi'bel, s. A slice; a spatula.

THICK, thik, a. (thic, thicca, Sax.) Dense; not thin; inspissated; turbid; feculent; noting the diameter of a body, as, a piece of timber seven inches thick; having more depth or extent from one surface to its opposite than usual, as, a thick plank; close; crowded with trees or other objects, as, a thick forest or wood; frequent; following each other in quick succession, as, the shot flew thick as hail; not easily pervious; not having due distinction or good articulation, as, a thick utterance; dull; somewhat deaf, as, thick of hearing. Thick-head, a bird of the genus Pachycephala. Thick-head or thick-headed, having a thick skull; dull; stupid. Thick-knee, a bird of the genus Gallinopus. Thick-set, close planted; having a short, thick body. Thick-skin, a coarse, gross person; a blockhead. Thick-skull, dullness; or a dull person; a blockhead. Thick-skulled, dull; heavy; stupid; slow to learn. Thick-sprung, sprung up close together. In Shipbuilding, thick-stuff, a term for all planks exceeding four inches in thickness;—s. the thickest part, or the time when anything is thickest;

In the thick of the dust and smoke he presently entered his men.—Kneller.

The delay of our hopes teaches us to mortify our desires.—Smallbridge.

consequence;

I have done my utmost to lead my life so pleasantly as to forget my misfortunes.—Pope.

after the substantive verb, and with the radical verb, it notes futurity, as, we are to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow; after have, it denotes duty or necessity, as, I have a debt to pay on Saturday. To is often written as an unaccented syllable, as in the expressions to-day, to-night, to-morrow: it is frequently used adverbially to modify the sense of verbs, as, to come to, to heave to. To and fro, backwards and forwards. To the face, in presence of; not in the absence of. In the foregoing explanation of to, it is to be considered that the definition given is not always the sense of to by itself, but the sense rather of the word preceding it, or connected with it, or of to in connection with other words. In general, to is used in the sense of moving toward a place, or toward an object, or it expresses direction toward a place, end, object, or purpose.

TRANSMIT, trans-mit', v. a. (transmitto, trans, and mitto, I send, Lat.) To send from one person or place to another; to suffer to pass through, as glass transmits light.

TRANSMITTAL, trans-mit'tal, s. Transmission.

TRANSMITTER, trans-mit'tur, s. One who transmits.

TRANSMITTIBLE, trans-mit'te-bl, a. That may be transmitted.

TRANSMUTABILITY, trans-mu-ta-bil'e-te, s. (see Transmute.) Susceptibility of change into another nature or substance.

TRANSMUTABLE, trans-mu'ta-bl, a. Capable of being changed into a different substance, or into something of a different form or nature.

TRANSMUTABLY, trans-mu'ta-ble, ad. With capacity of being changed into another substance or nature.

TRANSMUTATION, trans-mu-ta'shun, s. (transmutatio, Lat.) The change of anything into another substance, or into something of a different nature, as, the transmutation of water into oxygen and hydrogen. In Alchemy, the change of what were called the baser metals into gold—an absurd belief, which, like the universal medicines, was at one time highly popular. In Geometry, the change of one figure or body into another of equal area or solidity, as of a triangle into an equivalent square, of a sphere into a cube, &c.

TRANSMUTATIONIST, trans-mu-ta'shun-ist, s. One who believes in the transmutation of metals.

TRANSMUTE, trans-mute', v. a. (transmuto, trans, and muto, I change, Lat.) To change from one nature or substance into another.

TRANSMUTER, trans-mu'tur, s. One who transmutes.

TRANSON, tran'sum, s. (transenna, from trans, over, across, Lat.) In Architecture, the horizontal piece framed across a double-light window: when a window has no transom, it is called a clear-story window; the lintel over a door; the name of the instrument called a cross-staff. In Nautical affairs, the name of certain beams fixed across the stern-posts of a ship, and bolted thereto, to fortify her

TRANSPOSITIONAL—TRANSVERSE.

TRANSPOSITIONAL, trans-po-zish'un-al, a. Pertaining to transposition.

TRANSPOSITIVE, trans-poz'e-tiv, a. Made by transposing; consisting in transposition.

TRANSTRA, tran'stra, s. plu. (Latin.) In ancient Architecture, the horizontal timbers in the roofs of Roman buildings.

TRANSUBSTANTIATE, tran-sub-stan'she-ayt, v. a. (transubstantier, Fr. trans and substance.) To change to another substance.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION, tran-sub-stan-she-a'shun, s. Change of substance. In Roman Catholic Theology, the supposed conversion of the bread and wine in the eucharist, into the body and blood of Christ.

TRANSUBSTANTIATOR, tran-sub-stan-she-a'tur, s. One who maintains the popish doctrine of transubstantiation.

TRANSUDATION, tran-su-da'shun, s. (trans, through, and sudo, I sweat, Lat.) The oozing of fluids through membranes or through porous substances.

TRANSUDATORY, tran-su-da-tur-e, a. Passing by transudation.

TRANSUDE, tran-sude', v. n. (trans, and sudo, I sweat, Lat.) To pass through the pores or interstices of texture, as perspirable matter or other fluid; for example, grease heated will transude through leather.

TRANSUME, tran-sune', v. a. (transumo, trans, and sumo, I take, Lat.) To take from one thing to another; to convert from one thing into another.—Little used.

Bread and wine
Transumed, and taught to turn divine.—Crashaw.

TRANSMUMPT, tran'sumpt, s. A copy or exemplification of a record.

The pretended original breve was produced, and a transumpt or copy thereof offered them.—Lord Herbert.

TRANSECTION, trans-vek'shun, s. (transvectio, Lat.) The act of conveying or carrying over.

TRANSVERSAL, trans-ver'sal, a. (French; trans, and versus, turned, Lat.) Running or lying across. In Geometry, a line which traverses or intersects any system of other lines. In Anatomy, applied to organs, or parts of organs, blood-vessels, and sinuses, which are situated in, or pursue, a transverse direction, as, transversalis colli, a muscle of the neck, which turns it obliquely backwards and to one side; transversalis abdominis, a muscle arising from the cartilages of the seven lower ribs, &c., and inserted into the linea alba, and the crest of the ilium—it supports and compresses the bowels; transversus pedis, a muscle arising from the metatarsal bone of the great toe, and inserted into that of the little toe.

TRANSVERSALLY, trans-ver'sal-le, ad. In a direction crosswise.

TRANSVERSE, trans-vers', a. (transversus, Lat.) Lying or being across, or in a cross direction. In Conic Sections, transverse axis, the diameter which passes through both foci. In the ellipse, the transverse is the longest of all the diameters; in the hyperbola it is the shortest; and in the parabola, it is, like all the other diameters, infinite in length. In Anatomy, transversis auris, a muscle of the ear, which draws the upper part of the concha towards the helix. Transversus perinei, a muscle for the organs of generation, which keeps the perineum in its proper place. Transverse vaults, those which run from windows, recesses, &c. into the main vault. TRAP, trap, s. (trapp, Sax. trape, Fr.) A little engine or instrument with a catch or a valve for closing it—such a contrivance is used for catching vermin or game, or trespassers on private property; hence, figuratively, an ambush; a stratagem; a trap is also a part of many machines, and is used for throwing up a ball; hence, a game at ball; (trappa, Sax. trappe, Dan. a stair or stairs,) a name given by Kirwan to basalt, which he divided into two families, Common Trap and Figurate Trap: the word is usually employed to designate certain volcanic rocks, frequently occurring in large tabular masses at different intervals, and forming a succession of terraces or steps: the term is applied to various igneous rocks, without any regard to their constituent parts, but merely in reference to their form;—v. a. to catch in a trap; to ensnare; to take by stratagem;—(in the following senses, see Trappings): to adorn with trappings; to dress; to decorate: in low or burlesque style, a noun may be met with from this verb, as, to dress in one's traps, that is, in one's ornamental apparel;—v. n. to set traps for game, as, to trap for beaver. Trap-bat, or trap-stick, a stick used at the game of trap. Trap-door, a door that closes like a valve. Trap-tuff, masses of basalt, amygdaloid, hornblende, sandstones, &c. cemented.

TRAPA, tra'pa, s. (abridged from calcitrapa, the Latin name of an instrument called caltraps, furnished with four spikes, formerly used in war, to impede the progress of cavalry, in reference to the fruit of some of the species being furnished with four spines.) A genus of plants: Order, Holoragaceae.

TRAPAN, tra-pan', v. a. (treppan, Sax. from Trap.) To ensnare; to catch by stratagem;—s. a snare; a stratagem.—This is a different word from Trepan.

TRAPANNER, tra-pan'nur, s. One who ensnares.

TRAPE, trape, v. n. To traipse; to walk carelessly and sluttishly.—Little used.

TRAPELUS, trap'e-lus, s. A name given by Cuvier for a genus of Lizards, which have the form and teeth of the Agamæ, but their scales are small and without spines: Family, Agamidae.

TRAPES, trays, s. sing. A slattern; an idle sluttish woman.

TRAPEZIA, tra-pe'ze-a, s. A genus of Decapod Crustaceans: Family, Brachyura.

TRAPEZIAN, tra-pe'ze-an, a. (see Trapezium.) In Crystallography, having the lateral planes composed of trapeziums, situated in two ranges between two bases.

TRAPEZIFORM, tra-pe'ze-fawrin, a. Having the form of a trapezium.

TRAPEZIHEDRON, tra-pe-ze-he'drun, s. (trapezion, a trapezium, and hedra, a side, Gr.) A solid bounded by twenty-four equal and similar trapeziums.

TRAPEZIUM—TRASH.

TRAPEZIUM, tra-pe'ze-um, s. (Latin Gr.) In Geometry, a plane figure composed of four unequal right lines, none of them parallel.

Anatomy, trapezium os, a bone below the scapula, in the row which supports the metacarpal bones.

TRAPEZIUS, tra-pe'ze-us, s. In Anatomy, a muscle situated immediately below the integument of the posterior part of the neck and back: action is upon the scapula; and it also acts upon the neck and head, drawing the latter and turning it on its axis.

TRAPEZOID, trap-e-zoyd', s. (trapezoid, likeness, Gr.) A plane figure like a trapezium, differing from it in having two of its sides parallel. In Anatomy, trapezoides os, a bone resembling a trapezium, and belonging to the row of bones as the trapezium os, under Trapezium.

TRAPEZOIDAL, trap-e-zoyd'al, a. Having the form of a trapezoid. In Mineralogy, having a crystalline form composed of twenty-four trapeziums, similar.

TRAPPEAN, trap'pe-an, a. (from Trap.) Pertaining to trap, the mineral.

TRAPPER, trap'pur, s. One who sets traps for beavers and other wild animals, usually in the mountains.

TROCHETER—TROCHISCANTHUS.

TROCHETER, tro-ke'tur, s. (trochao, I turn, Gr.) The modern anatomical name of the greater tuberosity of the scapular extremity of the os brachii, as giving insertion to several rotatory muscles of the thoracic limb.

TROCHETIA, tro-ke'she-a, s. (in memory of M. Du Trochet, a vegetable physiologist.) A genus of plants, consisting of trees, natives of the island of Bourbon: Order, Byttneriaceæ. Also, a genus of Annelides, of the Leech kind, belonging to the family Abranchiata asetigeræ of Cuvier.

TROCHIA, tro'ke-a, s. (trochos, a top, Gr.) A genus of Mollusca, belonging to the Buccininae, the shape of the shells of which is intermediate between Purpura and Buccinum; the whorls are separated by a deep groove; inner lip, when young, depressed; when adult, thickened, convex, and striated; basal canal very small: Family, Muricidæ.

TROCHIDÆ, trok'e-de, s. (trochus, one of the genera.) A family of testaceous Mollusca, the shells of which are generally trochiform; the substance almost always perlaceous; outer lip never thickened; aperture entire; closed by a shelly or horny operculum.

TROCHIDON, trok'e-don, s. (trochos, a top, and odon, a tooth, Gr.) A genus of Mollusca, the shells of which are trochiform; the base of the pillar angulated; no umbilicus, or forming a tooth more or less developed, often with a lateral depressed groove; margin of the outer lip thin, the inside rarely striated: Family, Trochidæ.

TROCHILIC, tro-kil'ik, a. Having the power to draw out or turn round.

TROCHILICS, tro-kil'iks, s. The science of rotatory motion.

TROCHILIDÆ, trok-e-li'de, s. (trochilus, one of the genera.) The Humming-birds, a family of birds remarkable for the extreme richness of their plumage, and, in the most of instances, for their smallness. Swainson gives the following genera—Lampornis, Trochilus, Cynanthus, Phæthornis, Campylopterus.

TROCHILUS, trok'e-lus, s. (trochilos, from trecho, I run, Gr.) The Humming-bird, a genus of birds: Type of the family Trochilidæ. In Architecture, a hollow ring round a column; called also sotia, and by workmen, the casement. The name trochil has been given to the golden-crowned wren, and also to a small sea-bird said to obtain its food out of the crocodile's mouth.

The crocodile opens his chops to let the trochil in to pick his teeth, which gives it its usual feeding.—Sir Thomas Herbert's Travels, p. 364.

TROCHIN, trok'in, s. (trochao, I turn, Gr.) A term applied by Chaussier to the smaller of the two tuberosities, situated at the scapular extremity of the os brachii, as affording attachment to one of the rotatory muscles of the human arm.

TROCHINÆ, tro-ki'ne, s. (trochus, one of the genera.) A subfamily of the Trochidæ, distinguished by the shells being trochiform; the body whorl more or less wide and flattened beneath; the spire conical or pyramidal; the aperture oval, and wider than it is high.

TROCHINGS, trok'ings, s. The small branches on the top of a deer's head.

TROCHISCANTHUS, trok-is-kan'thus, s. (trochiskos, a small wheel, and anthos, a flower, Gr. from the shape of the flower.) A genus of Umbelliferous plants, natives of the south of Europe: Suborder, Orthospermæ.

TROCHISCH—TROGLODYTÆ.

TROCHISCH, trok'ish, s. (trochiskos, Gr.) A kind of tablet or lozenge.—See Troche.

TROCHITICS, tro-ki'tiks, s. (trochos, a wheel, Gr.) The science of rotatory motion.

TROCHLEA, trok'le-a, s. A name given by Chaussier to the internal articular eminence of the cubical extremity of the os brachii, on which the ulna rolls in extension and flexion of the fore-arm. In Mechanics, the same as pulley or tackle.

TROCHLEAR, trok'le-ar, s. A term applied by some anatomists to the superior oblique muscle of the human eye, from the reflection of its tendon over a cartilaginous pulley.

TROCHLEARY, trok'le-a-re, a. (from Trochlea.) Pertaining to the trochlea, as the trochleary muscle, and the trochleary nerve.

TROCHLEATE, trok'le-ate, a. (trochlea, a pulley, Gr.) In Botany, twisted in the form of a pulley.

TROCHOCARPA, tro-ko-kâr'pa, s. (trochos, a wheel, and karpos, a fruit, Gr. in reference to the shape of the fruit.) A genus of Australian trees: Order, Epacridaceæ.

TROCHOCHINUS, tro-ko-kro'nus, s. (trochos, and lirion, a lily, Gr.) A genus of fossil Crinoidians, from the Silurian strata of Tyrone.

TROCHOID, trok'oyd, a. (trochos, a wheel, and eidōs, resemblance or form, Gr.) The curve described by any point in a wheel rolling straightforward on a level,—same as Cycloid.

TROCHOIDAL, tro-koy'dal, a. Trochoidal curves, in Mathematics, a large number of lines which are produced by the composition of two circular motions, including the straight line, the circle, the ellipse, a class of curves called epitrochoids.

TROCHOIDES, tro-ko'e-des, s. (trochos, a wheel, Gr.) A species of movable connection of bones, in which one bone rotates upon another.

TROCHOTELTA, trok-o-tel'ta, s. (trochos, a top, Gr.) A genus of Mollusca, belonging to the Achatinæ, the shells of which are trochiform; the spire elevated; acute; inner lip thin; outer lip spreading.

TROCHUS, trok'us, s. (trochos, a top, Gr.) A genus of Mollusca, the trochiform shells of which have the operculum horny; the basal whorl broad; the aperture oval; sometimes angulated by the union of the pillar and the outer lip, but rarely striated or toothed: Subfamily, Trochinae.

When a twister a twisting will twist him a twist,
For the twisting of his twist he three times doth untwist;
But if one of the twines of the twist do untwist,
The twine that untwisteth, untwisteth the twist.
Untwirling the twine that untwisteth between,
He twirls with his twister the two in a twine;
Then twice having twisted the twines of the twine,
He twitcheth the twine he had twined in twain:
The twine that entwining before in the twine,
As twines were entwined, he now doth untwine,
'Twixt the twine intertwining, a twine more between,
He, twirling his twisters, makes a twist of the twine.—

U—UGLINESS.

UGLY—ULMACEÆ.

U, the twenty-first letter of the English alphabet and last of the vowels, has three distinct sounds; as u in unit; shortened when unaccented, as in unite—this is called the name sound: u as in but, bud, lull—this is termed the shut or short sound: u as in rule; shortened when unaccented, as in put, pull, &c.: u in rule is the same as oo in fool, and is generally that of u preceded by r, when the accent is on the syllable in which it occurs. The French u is unknown in the English, but is present in the Scottish language: in such French words as have been admitted into this dictionary, in which this sound is preserved, it is represented by eu. Webster, in his American dictionary, regards the distinction of the sound of u in brute, rude, rule, &c., from that in mute, duke, union, as a mischievous innovation. He who in this country would pronounce brute, rude, and rule, as if written bryute, ryude, ryule, would certainly not be regarded as imitating any truly English mode of pronouncing these words, whatever be the practice of our brethren on the other side of the Atlantic.

UBEROUS, u'ber-us, a. (uber, an udder, Lat.) Fruitful; abundant; copious.—Little used.

Sion, the mother of us all, is barren, and her uberous breasts are dry.—Quarles.

A third person called in to decide a controversy or question submitted to arbitrators, when the arbitrators do not agree in opinion; a person to whom the sole decision of a controversy or question between parties is referred;—v. a. to arbitrate; to decide as umpire; to settle, as a dispute.—Obsolete.

Judges are appointed to umpire the matter in contest between them.—South.

UN, un, (un or on, Sax. un, Germ. on, Dutch, an, Sansc. in, Lat.) A particle of negation, which may be used as a prefix to almost every adjective, or noun formed from an adjective, or adverb, in the language. In a few instances it is prefixed to verbs, as, unbind, unballast, unharness. To words purely English we generally prefix un; to those derived from the Latin or from the French, we use in, as, elegant, inelegant. Un is prefixed before substantives ending in ness, as, unfitness, unrighteousness; but if they have the Latin or French terminations in tude, ice, or ence, and, for the most part, if they end in ty, the prefix is in, as, inaptitude, injustice, influence, infidelity. For the derivations, the reader is referred to the primary words; we merely give the pronunciation, and the leading definitions.

of a single piece, it is termed univalve; of two, bivalve; and of more than two, multivalve.

VALVED, valvd, a. Having a valve or valves; composed of valves.

VALVELET, valv'let, } s. A little valve; one of the VALVULE, val'vule, } pieces which compose the outer covering of a pericarp.

VALVULA, val'vu-la, s. (Latin.) A little valve. In Anatomy, applied to the valvula eustachii, a membranous semilunar valve which separates the right auricle from the inferior vena cava. Valvula conniventes, the semilunar folds formed of the villous coat of the intestinum, duodenum, and jejunum.

VALVULAR, val'vu-lar, a. Containing valves.

VALVULINA, val-vu-li'na, s. A genus of microscopic Foraminifera.

VAMBRACE, vam'brase, s. (avant-bras, Fr.) In plate armour, the piece which served as a protection to the arm below the elbow.

VAMP, vamp, s. (gwam, that encloses, or goes partly round, Welsh.) The upper-leather of a boot or shoe, immediately above the sole;—v. a. to piece when old with a new vamp; to piece an old thing with a new part; to repair.

VAMPER, vamp'er, s. One who vamps.

VAMPIRE, vam'pire, s. (vampyr, Germ.) A demon which, in some parts of Germany and Hungary, was believed to suck human blood, and then to possess dead bodies, such bodies being declared to have been dug up florid and full of blood. In Zoology, a large variety of bat, distinguished for its alighting on animals and sucking their blood. Dr. Darwin caught one of these animals engaged in sucking the blood from his horse's withers one night while travelling near Coquimbo. The vampire bat has been often considered fabulous.

VAMPLET, vam'plet, s. In Archaeology, a piece of steel formed like a funnel, placed on tilting spears just before the hand to secure it: it was made to be taken off at pleasure.

VAMPS, vamps, s. A sort of stockings or hose formerly used, which came up only to the ancles.

colour, forming yellow or orange-colour with salifiable bases. Formula VOS.

VANADIUM, va-na'de-um, s. (from Vanadia, dinavian deity.) A metal first discovered by Jöns Jacob Berzelius, in 1830. It is a white metal; very difficult of reduction; not ex- air or water; and insoluble in sulphuric, and hydrofluoric acids, but soluble in nitromuriatic acids, with which it yields of a fine dark-blue colour. Symb. V. 68.578.

VANCOURIER, van-koor'e-ur, s. (avant-cour) A light-armed soldier, sent before armies the road upon the approach of an ene- cursor.

VANDA, van'da, s. A genus of plants: Orchidaceæ.

VANDAL, van'dal, s. In ancient History, which comprises various tribes of Teut- also of Slavonian origin, who lived in Prussia and Pomerania. From the fier- ter of this people, the word has come i- use proverbially to signify a barbarian; a cruel person.

VANDALIC, van-dal'ik, a. Pertaining to dals—hence, ferocious; rude; barbarous.

VANDALISM, van'dal-izm, s. Ferocious barbarity.

VANDELLIA, van-delle'a, s. (in honour of Vandelli, an Italian physician and naturalist) A genus of plants: Order, Scrophulariaceæ.

VANDYKE, van-dike', s. A handkerchie neck, with indentations and points, as portraits of persons painted by Van Dy- reign of Charles I.;—v. a. to ornament by indentations.

VANE, vane, s. (vaan, Dutch.) A plate a spindle at the top of a spire, for the p- showing, by its turning and direction, w- the wind blows. In ships, a piece of b- used for the same purpose. In mathem- philosophical instruments, vanes are sig- to direct the eye steadily and accurately- ticular point.

VANELLUS, van-el'lus, s. A genus of bird- plover kind: Family, Charadriidæ.

VAN-FOS, van-fos', s. A ditch on the out- counterscarp.

VANG, vang, s. In Nautical affairs, a- steadying the extremity or peak of a g- ship's side. Vangs is also used to signify membranous part or web of a feather.

VANGA, van'ga, s. A genus of perching bird- by Vigors among the Laniidæ, or Shrike- Swainson among the Crows.

VANGUARD, van'gurd, s. (vans and guards) troops who march in front of an army; line.

VANGUERIA, van-gwe're-a, s. (Von Van name in Madagascar.) A genus of plant- Cinchonaceæ.

VANILLA, van-il'la, s. (vagnilla, a dim. of knife or scissor-case, the fruit being long a- drical, and like the sheath of a knife.) of plants: Type of the order Vanillaceæ. culent fruit of a plant of the Orchidaceæ climbing over trees in the tropical parts of after the manner of ivy. It owes its frag- the presence of benzoic acid, crystals: form on the pod, if allowed to be undisturbed.

VANILLACEÆ—VANTBRACE.

is an aromatic, employed in confectionery and the preparation of liquors, in flavouring some kinds of chocolate, &c.

VANILLACEÆ, van-il-la'se-æ, s. (vanilla, one of the genera.) A natural order of plants, belonging to Lindley's Gynandrous group of Endogens. Its principal characters are—perianth articulated with the ovary, sometimes with an external calycine cup; sepals three; petals three; one of which is unlike the others, and forms a lip; stamen one, consolidated with the style into a column; anther terminal and opercular; pollen granular; ovary one-celled, with a three parietal placentæ; the plants are mostly climbing, and with large succulent flowers.

VANISH, van'ish, v. n. (vanesco, Lat. evanuir, Fr.) To disappear; to pass from a visible to an invisible state; to pass beyond the limit of vision; to pass away; to be annihilated or lost.

All these delights will vanish.—Milton.

VANQUISHABLE, vang'k-wish-a-bl, a. That may be conquered.

VANQUISHER, vang'k-wish-ur, s. A conqueror; a victor.

VANSIRE, van'sire, s. The small carnivorous quadruped Mangusta, a native of Madagascar and the Isle of France.

VANTAGE, vant'aje, s. (vantaja, Span. from the root of venio, I come, Lat.) Gain; profit; superiority; state in which one has better means of action or defence; opportunity; convenience—(obsolete in this sense);

Be assured, madam, it will be done
With his next vantage.—Shaks.

—v. a. to profit.—Obsolete as a verb.

Needless fear did never vantage none.—Spenser.

Vantage-ground, superiority of place or condition, which gives us an advantage over another.

VANTBRACE, vant'brase, s. (avant-bras, Fr.) Armour for the arm.—Obsolete.

I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,

And in my vantbrace put this wither'd brawn.—Shaks.

Written also vantbras.

VAPID—VARANIDÆ.

VAPID, vap'id, a. (apidus, Lat.) Having lost its life or spirit; deadness; flatness; dulness; want of spirit; unanimated.

VAPIDLY, vap'id-le, ad. In a vapid manner.

VAPIDNESS, vap'id-nes, s. The state of being vapid; deadness; flatness; dulness; want of life or spirit.

VAPORABILITY, vap-o-ra-bil'e-te, s. (see Vapour.) The quality of being capable of conversion into vapour.

VAPORABLE, vap'o-ra-bl, a. Capable of being converted into vapour by the agency of heat.

VAPORATE, vap'o-rate, v. n. To evaporate—the word now used.

VAPORATION, vap-o-ra'shun, s. Evaporation—the word now used.

VAPOUR, va'pur, s. (vapor, Lat. vapeur, Fr. vapores, Ital.) An invisible elastic fluid, rendered aeriform by heat, and capable of being condensed or brought back to the liquid or solid state by cold; steam; a visible fluid floating in the atmosphere, as smoke, mist, clouds, &c.; fume, physical or mental; vain imagination; unreal fancy: in the plural, diseases caused by flatulence or nervous debility, in which strange images float in the brain, and appear as if visible;—v. n. (evaporo, Lat.) to pass off in fumes or steam; to be exhaled; to evaporate; to bully; to boast or vaunt with a vain ostentatious display of worth; to brag;

And what is real in virtues wanting,
Supply with vapouring and vaunting.—Hudibras.

—v. a. to emit, cast off, or scatter in fumes or steam. Vapour bath, the application of vapour to the body in a close place. In Chemistry, an apparatus for the heating of the body by the vapour of water.

VAPOURED, va'purd, a. Moist; wet with vapours; splenetic; peevish.

VAPOURER, va'pur-ur, s. A boaster; one who makes a vaunting display of his own prowess or worth; a bragger.

tuberculous, projecting, rounded upon the head, as well as on the back, always distributed in rings or circular bands, parallel, and round the tail; the tongue protractile and fleshy, capable of elongation, and of being withdrawn into a sheath.

VARE, vare, s. (vare, Span.) A wand or staff of office.

VAREC, var'ek, s. In Commerce, the French name for kelp, or incinerated sea-weed; wrack; the plant Fucus vesiculosus.

VARECA, va-re'ka, s. (altered from Walwareka, the name of the fruit in Ceylon.) A genus of plants: Order, Passifloraceæ.

VAREGO-RUSSES.—See Varinghians.

VAREGUES.—See Varinghians.

VARENNEA, va-ren'ne-a, s. (in honour of M. Varenne de Feuille.) A genus of Leguminous plants: Suborder, Cæsalpinieæ.

VARGASIA, var-ga'she-a, s. (supposed to be an alteration from the name of one of the species in St. Domingo.) A genus of plants: Order, Malpighiaceæ.

VARI, va're, s. The name given by Buffon to the Lemur Mucaco of Linnaeus. It is a native of Madagascar.

VARIABLE, va're-a-bl, a. (French.) That may vary or alter; changeable; susceptible of change; liable to change; fickle; inconstant. In Analysis, variable quantity, a quantity conceived to be in a state of increase or diminution, or to have different values in the same equation, thus—the abscissa and ordinates of a curve are variable quantities, because they have different values for every different point in the curve; and in passing from one point to another, their values increase or diminish according to the law of the curve.

VARIABLENESS, va're-a-bl-nes, } s. Susceptibility VARIABILITY, va-re-a-bl'e-te, } of change; liability to change; inconstancy; fickleness; un-steadiness.

VARIABLY, va're-a-ble, ad. Changeably; with alteration; in an inconstant or fickle manner.

VARIAMENTO, va-re-a-men'to, s. (Italian, variation.) In Music, a free and varied manner.

VARIANCE, va're-ans, s. Discord; disagreement; any alteration of change or condition; dissension. In Law, a change of condition after a thing done; an alteration of something formerly laid in plea. At variance, in a state of difference or disagreement; in a state of enmity or dissension.

VARIANT, va're-ant, a. Different; diverse.—Rule.

VARIATE, va're-ate, v. a. To alter; to make different; to vary.

VARIATED, va're-ay-ted, a. Changed; altered.—
Not used.

What was the cause of their multiplied varied complotments against her?—Dean King (1008).

VARIATION, va-re-a'shun, s. (French; variatio, Lat.) Alteration; a variation in the former position, state, or qualities of the same thing; difference; change from one to another. In Music, a difference in performing the same air or melody, either by subdivision of its notes into others of shorter duration, or by adding graces; but in such a manner that the original melody is not lost in the decorations or alterations which it is thus made to undergo. In Analytical Geometry, variation of curvature, the change which takes place in the curvature in passing from one point of a curve to another, the circle being the only curve in which

VARIOLA—VARONIA.

VARIOLA, va-rí-o-la, s. (variola, Lat.) In Pathology, small-pox; a cutaneous disease introduced from the East into Europe about the twelfth century: there are two forms of the disease, generally called by medical men the distinct and the confluent—in the former the pustules are separate, in the latter they coalesce: since the general introduction of vaccination, this once fearful scourge has ceased to be an object of terror. In Zoology, a genus of fishes: Family, Percidae.

VARIOLITE, va-rí-o-lite, s. (varius, Lat.) A porphyritic rock, consisting of an imperfectly crystalized aggregate of felspar and quartz.

VARIOLOID, va-rí-o-loid, a. In Pathology, resembling the small-pox or variola.

VARIOLOUS, va-rí-o-lus, a. (variola, the small-pox, Lat.) Pertaining to or exhibiting the characters of the small-pox. In Zoology, applied to parts beset with many shallow impressions, like those produced by that disease.

VARIUS, va're-us, a. (varius, Lat.) Different; several; changeable; uncertain; unfixed; unlike each other; diverse; variegated; diversified.

VARIOUSLY, va're-us-le, ad. In different ways; with change; with diversity.

VARISSÉ, va-ris', s. In Veterinary affairs, an imperfection on the inside of the ham in horses: it is separate from the curb but at the same height, and frequently injures the sale of the animal by growing to an unsightly magnitude.

VARIUS, va're-us, s. In Anatomy, a name given to the cuboid bone from its irregular shape.

VARIX, va'riks, s. plu. Varices. (Latin.) In Pathology, the dilatation or swelling of a vein. In Conchology, varices are the longitudinal thickened elevations occurring, at greater or less intervals, on the outer surfaces of spiral shells.

VARLET, vár'let, s. (Old French, now valet: Horne Tooke considers this word, as well as valet, to have the same origin as harlot, the aspirate only being changed to v.) Anciently, a servant or footman.

*Tis service of danger.—Why, why, you were best to get one of the varlets of the city, a sergeant; I'll appoint you one, if you please.—Ben Jonson.

Varlet is now used for a scoundrel or rascal.

VARLETRY, vár'let-re, s. The rabble; the crowd.

Shall they hoist me up,
And show me to the shouting varletry,
Of censuring Rome?—Shaks.

VARNISH, vár'nish, s. (vernis, Fr. Port. and Dutch, varnish, low Lat. finiss, Germ.) A viscid fluid which, when spread thin upon a solid surface, becomes dry, and forms a glossy coating impervious to air and moisture; an artificial covering to give a fair appearance to any gloss or covering;—v. a. (vernissier, verner, Fr.) to cover with varnish for the purpose of producing a glossy surface; to cover with something which gives a fair external appearance; to give a colour or fair external appearance to in words.

And bow the knee to pomp that loves to varnish guilt.—Byron.

Varnish-tree, the English name of the Japanese tree, Rhus vernicifera.

VARNISHER, vár'nish-ur, s. One who varnishes, or one whose occupation is to varnish; one who disguises and palliates; one who gives a fair external appearance to anything.

VARONIA, va-ro-ne-a, s. (named in honour of Marcus

VARVELLED—VASSALAGE.

Jerentus Varro, a learned Roman, who flourished 116 years before Christ.) A genus of plants: Order, Cordiaceæ.

VARVELLED, vár'veld, a. In Heraldry, another name for jessed,—which see.

VARVELS, vár'velz, } s. (vervel, Fr.) In Falconry, VERVELS, ver'velz, } silver rings about the legs of a hawk, having the owner's name upon them.

VARVICITE, vár've-site, s. An ore of manganese, found at Hartshill in Warwickshire.

VARY, va're, v. a. (vario, Lat. varier, Fr. varior, Span.) To alter in form, appearance, substance, or position; to make different by a partial change; to change to something else; to make of different kinds; to diversify; to variegate;—v. n. to alter or be altered in any manner; to suffer a partial change; to be changeable; to alter; to differ; to be different; to be unlike; to become changed or different; to deviate; to depart, as vary from the law; to disagree; to be at variance;—s. change; alteration.—Not in use as a noun.

Such smiling rogues as these smooth every passion.
Revenge, affirm, and turn their halcyon looks,
With every gale and vary of their masters.—Shaks.

VAS, vas, s. (Latin.) A vessel. In Anatomy, applied to arteries, veins, ducts, &c., as vas deferens; but more frequently used in the plural form, as in vasa brevia, vasa vasorum, &c.

VASCOSA, vas-ko'sa, s. (in honour of Vasco de Gama, the celebrated Portuguese circumnavigator.) A genus of Leguminous plants: Suborder, Papilionaceæ.

VASCULAR, vas'ku-lar, a. (vasculum, a vessel, Lat.) Composed of, or supplied with, a multitude of vessels, as, in Anatomy, the vascular system, a vascular membrane. In Botany, the vascular system is that portion of the tissue of plants which is destined for the conveyance of air. Vascular plants are those in which the vascular system occurs or forms a principal feature: the air-vessels are the tracheæ or spirals.

Whose blood is fetch'd from fathers of warproof.—Shaks.

WARRANTISE, wawr'an-dise, s. In the Scotch Law, the obligation by which a person, conveying a subject or a right, is bound to uphold that subject or right against every claim, challenge, or burden arising from circumstances prior to the conveyance. It is either personal or real. Personal warrantise is that by which the granter and his heirs are personally bound. Real warrantise is that by which certain lands, called warrantise lands, are made over eventually in security of the lands conveyed. Warrantise is called simple warrantise, when the granter shall do nothing inconsistent with the grant; and absolute warrantise, contra omnia martales, by which the granter is liable for every defect in the subject or right he has granted.—Bell's Scot. Law, &c.

WARRANT, wawr'rant, s. (warrantas, Gael. gwarant, Welsh.) An act, instrument, or obligation, by which one person authorizes another to do something which he has otherwise not a right to do; an act or instrument investing one with a right or authority, and thus securing him from loss or damage; a precept authorizing an officer to seize an offender and bring him to justice; authority; power that authorizes or justifies any act; a commission that gives authority, or that justifies; a voucher, or that which attests and proves; right or legality—(obsolete in this sense);

a writing which authorizes a person to recover money or any other thing. Warrant or deed of attorney, a deed by which a person is to act in his name, and warrants him to act for him. Land-warrant, an instrument or writing issued by the proper officer, authorizing a person to locate or take up a tract of new or uncultivated land. Search-warrant, a precept authorizing a person to enter houses, shops, or other places, to search for a criminal, or for stolen or smuggled goods.

Warrant-officer, an officer holding a warrant from the navy board, such as the master, surgeon, purser, &c. of a ship. Warrantia dico, a writ directed to the justices, requiring them not to record a man as a defaulter who, after having a day assigned to him to appear in court in an action, was in the meantime, by command, employed in the king's service, so as to be prevented from appearing on such a day in court.

WARRANTABLE, waw'r-ant-a-bl, a. Authorized by commission, precept, or right; justifiable; defensible.

WARRANTABLENESS, waw'r-ant-a-bl-nes, s. The quality of being justifiable.

WARRANTABLY, waw'r-ant-a-ble, ad. In a manner that may be justified or warranted.

WARRANTEE, waw'r-ant-ee, s. The person to whom land or other thing is warranted.

WARRANTER, waw'r-ant-ur, s. One who gives authority or legally empowers; one who assures, or covenants to assume; one who contracts to secure another in a right, or to make good any defect of title or quality.

WARRANTIZE, waw'r-ant-ize, s. Authority; security.—Not in use.

There's none protector in the land but I:

Break up the gates, I'll be your warrantize.—Shaks.

WARRANTOR, waw'r-ant-tur, s. One who warrants.

WARRANTY, waw'r-ant-e, s. In Law, a promise or deed made by one person to another for himself and his heirs, to secure him and his heirs against all men, for the injuries agreed of between them; such warranty passes from the seller to the buyer, from the feoffor to the feoffee, and from the releaser to the releasee. In common recoveries, a fictitious person is called the warranty. In the sale of goods or personal property, the seller warrants the title, for warranty is express or implied. If a man sells goods which are not his own, or which he has no right to sell, the purchaser may have right for the injury; and if the seller warrants goods to be sound and not defective, and they prove to be otherwise, he must indemnify the purchaser, for the law implies a contract in the warranty, to make good any defect, but the warranty must be at the time, and not afterwards.—Blackstone. Authority; justificatory mandate or precept; warrant—(the word now used in this sense); security;

The stamp was a warranty of the public.—Locke.

WATCH, waw'tsh, s. (wacce, from wacian, I wake, vach, or vakt, watch-guard, Swed.) Forbearance of sleep; attendance without sleep; attention; close observation; guard; vigilance for keeping or protecting against danger; a watchman or man set apart to guard or protect, or to give alarm in case of danger; a sentinel; a guard; the place where a guard is kept; post or office of watchmen;

As I did stand my watch on the hill.—Shaks.

(this rather appears to belong to the next sense) —a period of the night in which one person, or set of persons, stand as sentinels, or the time of one relief to another. Among the Jews, this seems to have been originally of four hours' duration, but afterwards changed to three, when instead of three there were four watches, the first commencing at six in the evening;—a small portable timepiece or chronometer, the machinery of which is moved by a spring. At sea, the space of time one set or division of the crew remain on deck to perform the various duties: the time differs in the ships of different nations;—v. n. (wacian, wacian, Sax.) to be awake or continue without sleep; to be attentive; to look with attention or steadiness; to look with expectation; to keep guard; to act as sentinel; to look for danger; to be vigilant in preparation for an event or trial, the time of whose arrival is uncertain; to be insidiously attentive, as, to watch an opportunity to injure another; to attend on the sick during the night, as, to watch a man in a fever. To watch over, to be cautiously observant of; to inspect; to superintend and guard from danger and error;—v. o. to guard; to have in keeping; to lie in ambush; to lie in wait for; to tend; to guard, as, to watch a flock; to observe for some particular purpose, as, to watch a suspected person, or the progress of a bill in parliament. Watch-glass, in ships, a half-hour glass used to measure the time of watching on deck; a concave-convex glass for covering the dial of a watch. Watch-house, a house in which a watch or guard is kept, and, in police establishments, to which offenders

In Husbandry, a side-wall or bank for restraining the current of the water. Water-gall, a cavity made in the earth by a torrent of water; an appearance in the rainbow. Water-gang, an old word for a water-drain. Water-gilding, the process of gilding by the application of amalgam of gold to the surface of metals; the mercury of the amalgam is driven off by heat, and a thin coating of gold remains. Water-hammer, a column of water in a vacuum, which, not being supported in the air, falls against the end of the vessel with a peculiar noise. It may be formed by corking a vessel of water while it is boiling: the vapour condensing as it cools, a vacuum is formed. Water-lashed, lashed by the water. Water-level, the level formed by the surface of still-water. Water-line, a horizontal line supposed to be drawn about a ship's bottom at the surface of the water. This is higher or lower, according to the depth of water necessary to float her. Water-logged, lying like a log on the water; a ship is said to be water-logged, when by leaking and receiving a great quantity of water into her hold, she has become so heavy as not to be manageable by the helm, and to be at the mercy of the waves. Waterman, a boatman, a ferryman; one who manages water-craft. Water-mark, the mark or limit of the rise of a flood. Water-meadows, meadows on low flat grounds, capable of being fertilized by the overflowing of neighbouring streams. Water-mill, a mill, the machinery of which is moved by water, and thus distinguished from a wind-mill. Water-murrain, a disease in black cattle. Water-measure, in Commerce, a measure for sea-coals, &c., while on board vessels in pool or river, in which five streaked pecks were allowed to the bushel, exceeding the Winchester measure by one peck to the bushel.

WATER.

Water of crystallisation, in Chemistry, the proportion of water necessary to retain certain salts in a crystalline form. Water-ordeal, a judicial trial of persons accused of crimes, particularly witchcraft, by means of water. The person was thrown into the water, and if the body floated he was adjudged guilty, but if he sunk and was drowned, he was declared innocent. Water-plant, an aquatic plant, or one which grows in water. Water-poise, an instrument for examining the purity of water. Water-pot, a vessel for holding or conveying water, or for sprinkling water on cloth in bleaching, or, in gardening, on plants. Water-proof, impervious to water. Water-rocked, rocked by the water. Water-rocket, a kind of firework discharged in the water. Water-rot, to rot by being steeped in water, as, to water-rot hemp. Water-sail, a small sail used under a studding-sail or driver-boom. Water-sapphire, a kind of blue precious stone. Water-shot, in Navigation, a sort of riding at anchor when a ship is moored, neither across the tide, nor right up and down, but betwixt both. Water-shoot, a sprig or shoot from the root or stock of a tree—(local.) Water-soak, to soak or fill the interstices with water. Water-spout, at sea a vertical column of water raised from the surface of the sea, and driven furiously by the wind. Water-station, a small reservoir of water on a railway connected with a well, from which tanks may be replenished. Water-table, in Architecture, a ledge in the wall of a building, about 18 or 20 inches from the ground. Water-thermometer, an instrument for ascertaining the precise degree of cold at which water ceases to be condensed. Water-triplicate, in Astrology, the three signs Cancer, Scorpio, and Pisces. Water-tight, so tight as to retain or not admit water. Water-woy, in a ship's dock, a piece of timber, forming a channel for conducting water to the scuppers. Water-wheel, a wheel moved by water, of which there are four sorts—the over-shot, the under-shot, the breast-wheel, and the horizontal-wheel. The water acts vertically on the three first sorts, and horizontally on the last. The Barker's mill is also a description of water-wheel, which has been very much improved of late by Mr. Whitelaw of Johnstone, near Glasgow, for which he has a patent. Water-wings, the walls erected on the banks of a river, next bridges, to secure the foundations from the action of the current. Water-works, the name applied to all descriptions of works employed for raising or sustaining water, as water-mills, wheels, sluices, and various other hydraulic apparatus; but it is generally used at the present time for works erected to supply cities and towns with water for the daily use of the inhabitants. In Botany, Water-alee, or water-soldier, the plant Stratiotes aloides; grows in deep fen ditches and pools. Water-apple, a tree of the genus Annona of Linnaeus. Water-betony, or water-figwort, the aquatic plant Scrophularia aquatica, plentiful in Britain: it is also called brownwort and bishop-leaves. Water-blinks, the annual British plant Montia fontana; grows in watery places, especially on a gravelly soil. Water-catrops, the common name of plants of the genus Trapa. The kernels of the nuts of T. natans resemble that of the chestnut, and are sold in Venice under the name of Jesuits' nuts. Water-chesnut, the plant Scirpus tuberosus. Water or fountain chickweed, the plant consisting of water; tasteless; insipid; spiritless. We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross, watery pumpkin.—Shaks.

WATTLE, wot'tl, s. (watel, a twig, Sax.) A twig or flexible rod—and hence, a hurdle; the fleshy excrescence which grows under the throat of a cock or turkey, or a like substance on a fish; a rod laid on a roof to support the thatch. Wattle-crow, a bird of the genus Glaucopis, or subfamily Glaucopinae;—v. a. to bind with twigs; to twist or interleave twigs with one another; to plait or form a kind of network of flexible branches.

WATTLED, wot'tld, a. In Botany, having processes like the wattles of a cock.

WAIL, wawl, v. a. To cry as a cat.

WAILING, waw'ling, s. The act of crying as a cat.

WAVE, wave, s. (wæg, wæg, Sax.) A moving swell or volume of water, usually a swell raised and driven by the wind; unevenness; inequality of surface; the line or streak of lustre on clothes watered, undulated, and calendered;—v. n. (wa-fian, Sax.) to play loosely; to move like a wave; to float; to undulate;

His purple robes waved careless to the wind.—

to fluctuate; to waver—(obsolete in this sense);

If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he waved indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good nor harm.—Shaks.

—v. a. to raise inequalities of surface; to move loosely;

They waved their fiery swords, and in the air Made horrid circles.—Milton.

to waft; to remove anything floating; to beckon; to direct by a waft or waving motion; (weyver, Norm.) to put off; to cast off; to cast away; to reject, as, to wave stolen goods—(usually written waive); to quit; to depart from;

He resolved not to wave his way.—Milton.

to put aside for the present, or to omit to pursue, as, to wave a motion; to relinquish as a right or claim. Wave-subjected, subjected to be overflown. Wave-worn, worn by the waves. Wave-loof, a loof for a wave-offering. Wave-offering, in the Jewish ceremonies, an offering made by waving to the four cardinal points.

WAVED, wayvd, a. Variegated in lustre, as waved silk. In Heradry, indented. In Botany, undulate; rising and falling in waves on the margin, as a leaf.

WAVELESS, wave'les, a. Free from waves; undisturbed; unagitated.

WAVELIKE, wave'like, a. Resembling a wave; undulating.

WAVELITE, wa've-lite, s. (in honour of Dr. Wavel, who discovered it.) WEATHERING, weth'ur-ing, s. Among Millwrights, the angle at which the sails of a wind-mill are set to receive the impulse of the wind.

WEAVE, weev, v. a. Pret. wove, past part. woven, waved is seldom used, (wefan, Sax. weben, Germ. weeven, Dutch, wæver, Dan.) To unite thread of any kind in such a manner as to form cloth; to form by texture, or by inserting one part of the materials by crossing the other;

There in her hair
The painter plays the spider, and hath woven
A golden mesh to entrap the hearts of men, Faster than gnats in cobwebs.—Shaks.

to unite by intermixture;

When religion was woven into the civil government and flourished under the protection of the emperors, men's thoughts and discourses were full of secular affairs.—Addison.

to interpose; to insert;

The duke be here to-night! The better! best!
This waves itself perforce into my business.—Shaks.

—v. n. to practise weaving, as, to weave with a loom: this is elliptical, the article woven is understood.

WEAVER, we'vur, s. One who weaves; one whose business is to weave. Weaver-bird, a bird belonging to the genus Ploceus, so named from the surprising skill they exhibit in the construction of their nests, the materials of which are interlaced in a most ingenious manner: the Weaver-birds are subdivided in several subgenera, as Euplectes, Plocepasser, and Textor. Weaver, or weaver-fish, a fish of the genus Trachinus.

WEAVING, we'ving, s. The act, art, or occupation of forming cloth in a loom by the union or intermixture of threads; the lash or work done in making cloth.

WEB, web, s. (Saxon; waf, Swed.) Texture of thread; plexus; anything woven; a piece of cloth; the warp given to a weaver as prepared by the warper; a dusky film that forms over the eye and hinders the sight; suffusion; some part of a sword, probably network of the handle: Mason thinks it is the blade.

The sword whereof the web was steel;
Pommel rich stone; belt gold, approved by the touch.—Fairfax.

In Anatomy, applied to certain parts resembling a web, as the arachnoid membrane, the cellular membrane, called by Blumenbach the mucus' web. In Ship-building, the thin partition of the inside of the rim, and between the strokes of a sheaf. In Ornithology, the membrane which unites the toes of many water-fowls. Spider's web, a plexus of very delicate threads or filaments which a spider spins from its bowels, and which serves as a net to catch flies or other insects as its prey. The web of a coulter, the thin part.—Webster. This seems to justify Mason's idea as to the web of a sword being the blade. Web-footed, having web-feet, as those of a duck and some lizards.

WEBBED, webd, a. Having the toes united by a membrane or web, as the webbed feet of a duck or other aquatic fowl.

WEBSTERITE, web'ster-ite, s. The subsulphate of alumina, a mineral which occurs in reniform masses and botryoidal concretions, of a white or yellowish-

WEDDING, wed'ding, s. Marriage; nuptials; nuptial ceremonies or festivities. The compounds are — wedding-chamber, wedding-clothes, wedding-day, wedding-gown, wedding-feast, &c.

WEDELIA, we-del'e-a, s. (in honour of George Wolfgang Wedel, a German botanist, died 1721.) A genus of Composite plants of the Thistle kind: Suborder, Tubulifloræ.

WEDGE, wedj, s. (wegg, wag, Sax. weg, Dan. wigg, Swed. wig, Dutch.) A mass of metal, as a wedge of gold; a tapered mass of metal or wood, used sometimes for raising bodies, but more frequently for dividing or splitting them: this is one of the five mechanical powers or simple engines; anything in the form of a wedge.

In warlike musters they appear,
In rhombs and wedges, and half-moons and wings.—Milton.

In Geometry, a solid having five sides or faces, three of which are rectangles, and the remaining two consequently triangles, and parallel to each other. The wedge, considered as a geometrical figure, is a prism with a triangular base. Its content is therefore equal to the area of the triangular base multiplied into the distance between the parallel planes; —v. a. to cleave with a wedge—(not used in this sense);

My heart, as wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain, Lest Hector, or my father, should perceive me.—Shaks.

to drive, as a wedge is driven; to crowd or compress closely; to force, as a wedge forces its way, or to wedge one's way; to fasten with a wedge or wedges, as, to wedge in a rail or piece of timber; to fix in the manner of a wedge;

Your wit will not so soon out as another man's will, it is so strongly wedged up in a blockhead.—Shaks.

—a. wedge-shaped, having the shape of a wedge; cuneiform: a wedge-shaped leaf is broad and truncate at the summit, and tapers down to the base.

WEDGEWOOD-WARE, wedj'wud-ware, s. A superior kind of earthenware, made at Henley in England, and so called from its inventor, Mr. Wedgwood. Wedgwood's pyrometer, an instrument used for ascertaining very great degrees of heat. Its indications depend upon the contraction of pure clay when much heated.

WEDHEDRIP, wed'hed-rip, s. (wed, a covenant, and heddan, to pray or desire, and rippan, to reap, Sax.) In Archæology, the customary services which inferior tenants paid their lord in cutting down his corn, or doing other harvest duty, as a covenant of the tenant to reap for his lord at the time of his bidding or commanding.—Paroch. Antiq. 481, Cowcl.

WEDLOCK, wed'lok, s. (wed and lock, or lac, a gift, Sax.) Marriage; matrimony. Wedlock-bound, bound by marriage. Wedlock-hours, hours devoted to marriage ceremonies.

Say, doth she stray about
By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays For happy wedlock-hours?—Shaks.

WEDNESDAY, wenz'day, s. (Wodinsdag, Wodin's-day, Odin's-day, or Onsday, Swed. from Wodin or Odin, a deity or chief among the northern nations of Europe.) The fourth day of the week; the day betwixt Tuesday and Thursday.

WEE, we, s. (Scotch.) Small; little.—Not in use. He hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard.—Shaks.

WEECH-ELM, weesh'elm, } s. A species of elm.
WITSH-ELM, wish'elm, }

WEED, weed, s. (weod, Sax.) The general name of any plant which is useless or troublesome; (weod, weoda, Sax.) a vestment; a garment.

The snake throws her enamelled skin,
Weed enough to wrap a fairy in.—Shaks.

This word is used only in the plural, as widow's weeds. The word weed is used in Scotland for a disease attended with cold and shivering, peculiar to females. Weed-grown, overgrown with weeds. Weed-hook, or weeding-hook, a hook used for cutting away or extirpating weeds;—v. a. to free from noxious plants; to free any plot of ground from weeds; to root out as noxious;

Oh Mercius,
Each word thou'st spoke has weeded from my heart to free from anything hurtful or offensive; to root out vice.
A root of ancient envy.—Shaks.

WEEDER, weed'ur, s. One who weeds or frees from anything noxious.

WEEDERY, weed'ur-e, s. Weeds.—Obsolete.

Hard by there was a place all covered o'er
With stinging nettles, and such weedery.—
Moré's Song of the Soul.

WEEDING, weed'ing, s. The operation of freeing from weeds. Weeding-chisel, a tool with a divided chisel point, for cutting the roots of large weeds within the ground. Weeding-fork, a strong three-pronged fork, used in clearing ground of weeds. Weeding-rhin, an implement resembling the frame of a wheel-barrow, used for tearing up weeds on summer fallow.

WEIGHABLE—WEINMANNIA.

To weigh down, to oppress with weight; to depress; to overbalance;—v. n. to have weight, as, to weigh lighter or heavier; to be considered important; to have weight on the intellectual balance; to bear heavily; to press hard;

Canst thou not minister to a mind diseased,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
As weighs upon the heart?—Shaks.

to weigh down; to sink by its own weight;

Making the bough, being overlaiden, weigh down.—Bacon.

—s. a certain quantity: a weigh of wool, cheese, &c., is 256 lbs. avoirdupois; a weigh of corn is 40 bushels; a weigh of barley or malt, 6 quarters.

WEIGHABLE, wa'a-bl, a. That may be weighed.

WEIGHED, wade, a. Experienced.—Not in use.

A young man not weighed in state matters.—Bacon.

WEIGHED, wa'ur, s. One who weighs; a person whose duty is to weigh commodities; that which weighs.

WEIGHING, wa'ing, s. The act of ascertaining weight; as much as is weighed at once, as a weighing of beef. Weighing-cage, a cage in which living animals may be conveniently weighed. Weighing-house, or weigh-house, a building furnished with a dock and other conveniences and apparatus for weighing commodities, or ascertaining the tonnage of boats to be used on a canal. Weighing-machine, a machine for weighing heavy bodies, and particularly wheel-carriages at turnpike gates; a machine for weighing cattle; a machine for ascertaining the weight of the human body.

WEIGHT, wate, s. (wiht, Sax. wigt, gewicht, Germ.) The quantity of a body ascertained by the balance; a ponderous mass; something heavy; pressure; burden, as the weight of grief; importance; influence; power; efficacy; consequence; moment; impressiveness. In Commerce, a certain known and standard quantity of a heavy material, used, together with a balance, steelyard, &c., to ascertain particular quantities of goods, suspended so as to counterpoise the thing weighed. In Mechanics, anything to be raised, sustained, or moved by a machine, as distinguished from the power or that force by which the machine is put in motion. In Natural Philosophy, the weight of a body is synonymous with its specific gravity multiplied by its bulk, or it is the measure of the amount of gravitation in any body compared with that of other bodies. fore contains 384 days. The civil year is the year of the calendar. The ancient Egyptian year consisted invariably of 365 days; it was called an erratic or vague year, because, in the course of 1400 years, its first day wandered as it were over all the seasons. The Julian year, so called because fixed by Julius Caesar, consists of 365½ days. Caesar ordered that the civil year should consist of 365 days for three successive years, and the fourth of 366 days. To correct the difference between the real solar years and the mean Julian years, which is 11' 10.3", the year 1700, 1800, and 1900, are made not bissextile, but common years of 365 days. The mean length of the Gregorian year, 365 d. 5 h. 12", exceeding the true tropical year by 22.38", which amounts to a day in about 3866 years. The bissextile, or leap year, contains 366 days, occurring, as already stated, every fourth year; the February of that year having 29 instead of 28 days. Sabbatic year, among the Israelites, was every seventh year, when their land was suffered to lie untilled. The civil or legal year formerly commenced on the 25th day of March. Year-book, one of the books of law reports, from Edward II. to Henry VIII., which was taken and published annually at the expense of the crown.

Affecting a youthier turn than is consistent with my time of life.—Spectator.

YPIGHT, e-pite', a. Fixed.—Obsolete.

Far neath a craggy cliff ypight.—Spenser.

YTTRIA, it'tre-a, s. The oxide of Yttrium. It has the appearance of a fine white powder, without taste or smell. It combines with acids and forms salts.

YTTRIOUS, it'tre-us, a. Pertaining to or containing Yttria.

YTTRICERITE, it-tro-ser'ite, s. A mineral which occurs crystalized and massive; primary form of the crystal or cube. It is of various shades of blue, red, and greyish white. Its constituents are—fluoric acid, 25.45; yttria, 8.10; oxide of cerium, 16.45; lime, 50.00. Sp. gr. 3.447.

YTTRICOLUMBITE, it-tro-kol'um-bite, s. The name of a mineral, of which there are three sub-species: the yellow, brown, and black. The constituents of the three are as follow:—

	Yellow.	Brown.	Black.
Colombic Acid,	60.124 ...	51.815 ...	57.00
Tungstic Acid,	1.044 ...	2.592 ...	8.25

YTTRIUM, it'tre-um, s. (from being found at Itterby in Sweden.) A peculiar metal, discovered in the state of an oxide, or an earth; when the metal is separated from the chloride, the decomposition is attended with a very vivid disengagement of light and heat; when the mass resulting from the decomposition is put into water, the yttrium separates in small brilliant scales, which have a perfect metallic lustre; after being washed and dried, it is a brilliant blackish grey powder, composed of small metallic scales. It does not oxidize by the action of the air or water, but when heated to redness in the air, it takes fire, burns with splendour, and is converted into yttria.

YUCCA, yuk'ka, s. (Yuca, the name in St. Do-

Z.

Z—ZANTHOMYZA.

Z, the last letter of the English alphabet, is a sibilant articulation, and is merely a vocal S, bearing the same relation to S as V does to F. It has not a double nor a compound sound as in some other languages. As a numeral, Z stands for 2,000; with a dash over it, Z̄, it stands for 2,000,000.

ZACCHO, zak'ko, s. The lowest part of the pedestal of a column.

ZACINTHA, za-sin'tha, s. (from its growing in the island of Zanthé.) A genus of Composite plants: Suborder, Tubulifloræ.

ZAFFIRE, } zaf'fur, s. The residuum of cobalt, ZAFFRE, } after the sulphur, arsenic, and other volatile matters have been expelled by calcination.

ZALACCA, za-lak'a, s. A plant of the genus Calamus, a native of Java, cultivated for its fruit, which is about the size of a walnut, and covered with scales like those of a lizard. This tree is supposed to yield the substance called Dragon's-blood.

ZAMIA, za'me-a, s. (Greek, loss or damage, a name applied by Pliny to the cone pines of the fir, which, when suffered to decay upon the tree, injures the succeeding crop.) A genus of plants: Order, Cycadeaceæ.

ZAMITE, zam'ite, s. A fossil plant of the genus Zamia.

ZANCHLURUS, zan-klú'rus, s. (zanklos, a hook, and oura, a tail, Gr.) A genus of fishes belonging to the Xiphynæ, or Sword-fishes: Family, Scomberidæ.

ZANCLOSTOMUS, zan-klos'to-mus, s. (zanklos, a hook, and stoma, a mouth, Gr.) A genus of birds belonging to the Coccozinæ, or Hook-billed Cuckoos: Family, Cuculidæ.

ZANCLUS, zang'klus, s. (zanklos, a hook, Gr.) A genus of fishes belonging to the Chaetodoninæ: Family, Chaetodonidæ.

ZANNICHELLIA, zan-ne-tshel'le-a, s. (in honour of John Jerome Zannichella, a Venetian apothecary.) Pond-weed, a genus of plants: Order, Niadaceæ.

ZANONIA, za-no'ne-a, s. (in memory of Giacomina Zanoni, formerly prefect of the Botanic Garden at Bologna, author of Istoria Botanica, died 1682.) A genus of plants: Order, Cucurbitaceæ.

ZANTHOMYZA, zan-tho-mi'za, s. (zanthos, yellow, and mixis, mixing, Gr.) A genus of birds: Family, Milliphaagidæ.

ZANTHORIZA—ZEBRA.

ZANTHORIZA, zan-tho-rí'za, s. (zantho rhiza, a root, Gr. the roots being of a genus of plants: Order, Ranunculaceæ.)

ZANTHORNIS.—See Xanthornus.

ZANTHOXYLUM, zan-thoks-i'lum, s. (zantho, and xylos, wood, Gr. the roots are Toothache-tree, a genus of plants: Order, Zygophyllaceæ.)

ZANY, za'ne, s. (zanni, Ital.) A man buffoon;—v. a. to mimic.—Not in use.

ZAPANIA, za-pa'ne-a, s. (in honour of Zappa, an Italian botanist.) A genus of plants: Order, Verbenaceæ.

ZAPHARA, zaf'a-ra, s. A mineral used to produce a sky colour in their ware.

ZAPOTE, za'pote, s. The name given to fruits which are round or roundish, as an apricot.

ZEAL, ze'a, s. (zao, I live, Gr. from qualities.) Indian Corn or Maize, a important grasses, extensively cultivated in countries as an article of food.

ZEAL, zeal, s. (zylos, Gr. zelus, Lat. ardour in the pursuit of any cause;—tain zeal.—Not in use.

ZEAL, zeal, s. (zylos, Gr. zelus, Lat. ardour in the pursuit of any cause;—tain zeal.—Not in use.

ZEBRASOMA—ZEPHYR.

ZEBRASOMA, ze-bra-so'ma, s. (zebra and soma, a body, Gr.) A genus of fishes belonging to the Acanthurinae: Family, Coryphænidæ.

ZEBU, ze'bū, s. Bos indicus, or Taurus indicus, a bovine animal, which varies in size from a large mastiff dog, to a full-grown European bull. It is usually furnished with a fatty excrescence or hump upon the shoulders. It is a native of India and Northern Africa. It is called the Indian bull, cow, or ox.

ZECHIN, ze'tshin, s. A Venetian gold coin, usually written Sequin,—which see.

ZECHSTEIN, zek'stine, s. The German name for a member of the new red sandstone formation.

ZED, zed, s. The name of the letter Z.

ZEDOARY, zed'o-a-re, s. A medicinal root belonging to the plant Curcuma Zedoaria. It is a warm stomachic.

ZEIDÆ, ze'o-de, s. (zeus, one of the genera.) A family of Acanthopterygious fishes, of the tribe Microleptes; the body in the typical groups is ovate or short, the back covered with spines or prickles, placed before the dorsal fins, which are generally single; jaws capable of being protruded; scales small or none; ventral fins present.

ZEINE, ze'ine, s. A yellow substance having the appearance of wax, obtained from Indian corn.

ZEMINDAR, ze-min'dār, s. In India, a feudatory or landholder, who governs a district of country and collects taxes. He underlets to tenants, and these to others.

ZEMINDARY, ze-min'da-re, s. The jurisdiction of a zemindar.

ZEND, zend, s. The name given to the language in which the sacred books of the Parsees, or Fire-worshippers of Persia, are written.

ZENDAVESTA, zen-da-ves'ta, s. Among the Parsees, a sacred book ascribed to Zoroaster, and revered as a bible, or sole rule of faith and practice. It is sometimes called zend by contraction.

ZENITH, zen'ith, s. (French; zenit, Ital.) That point in the visible celestial hemisphere, which is vertical to the spectator, and from which a direct perpendicular line passing through the spectator, and extended, would proceed to the centre of the earth: it is opposed to the Nadir.

ZENODON, zen'o-don, s. (zenos, strange, and odous, a tooth, Gr.) A genus of fishes belonging to the Balistinae, distinguished by the two lateral teeth in the upper jaw being pointed and lengthened: Family, Balistidæ. Also, a genus of serpents, the body of which is long and subcompressed; the scales nearly square.

ZENOPELTIS, zen-o-pel'tis, s. (zenos, strange, and pelte, a shield, Gr.) A genus of serpents, in which the nose is rounded; the plates of the head triangular, and larger than the dorsal scales, and the tail conical: Family, Coluberidæ.

ZEOLITE, ze'o-lite, s. (zeo, I boil or foam, and lithos, a stone, Gr.) A family name for a number of minerals, many of them of great beauty, and of various forms of crystallization; the principal are—prehnite, apophyllite, cubisite or analcime, chamasite, harmotome, laumontite, dipyre, natrolite, and wavelite. They are so called from their intumescence before the blowpipe.

ZEOLITIC, ze-o-lit'ik, a. Pertaining to zeolite.

ZEPHYR, zef'ur, s. (zephyrus, Lat. zephyros, Gr.) The west wind, and, poetically, any soft, mild, ZEPHYRANTHES—ZIBETT.

gentle breeze. The poets personify Zephyrus, and make him the mildest and gentlest of the sylvan deities.

Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes.—
Milton.

ZEPHYRANTHES, zef-er-an'this, s. (zephyros, a zephyr, and anthos, a flower, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Liliaceæ.

ZERDA, zer'da, s. A yellowish pale-brown quadruped of the dog kind, found in the desert of Zahara, beyond Mount Atlas.

ZERO, ze'ro, s. (Italian.) A cipher; nothing; the point on a thermometer where its scale of gradation commences; the zero of the thermometers of Reaumur and Celsius is at the point where water congeals; the zero of Fahrenheit is fixed at the point at which mercury stands when immersed in a mixture of snow and common salt; in Wedgewood's pyrometer, zero corresponds with 1077° of Fahrenheit's scale.

ZEST, zest, s. (zistan, to peel, Pers.) A piece of orange-peel used to give flavour to liquor, or the fine thin oil which spurts from it when squeezed; also, the woody thick skin quartering the kernel of a walnut; relish; something that gives a relish or flavour; or the taste itself;

Almighty vanity, to thee they owe
Their zest of pleasure, and their balm of woe.—
Young.

—v. a. to give zest or relish to; to heighten taste or relish; to cut the peel of an orange or lemon from top to bottom into thin slices, or to squeeze the peel over the surface of any liquid to give it flavour.

ZETA, zet'a, The Greek letter Z, ζ. In Architecture, a little closet or chamber, with pipes running along the walls, to convey into it fresh air or warm vapour from below.—Webster.

ZETETIC, ze-tet'ik, a. (zeteto, I inquire, Gr.) That seeks; that proceeds by inquiry.

ZETICULA, zet-ik'u-la, s. A small withdrawing-room.—Webster.

ZEUS, ze'us, s. A genus of fishes with oval bodies, small distinct scales, and large heads: Type of the family Zeidæ. In Mythology, a name of Jupiter among the Greeks, expressive of his being the father of mankind, by whom do things live.

ZEUXITE, zuke'site, s. (zeuxis, Gr. connection, because it occurs in the United Mines, Cornwall.) A mineral of a brown colour, with a shade of green; composed of very small flat rectangular prisms, interwoven so as to leave cavities between them; lustre vitreous and glistening; opaque. It consists of silica, 33.48; alumina, 31.84; protoxide of iron, 36.010; lime, 2.456; water, 5.28: sp. gr. 3.05; hardness = 4.25.

ZEXMENIA, zeks-me'ne-a, s. (an anagram of Ximenesia.) A genus of Composite plants: Suborder, Tubulifloræ.

ZETHERIA, zay-he're-a, s. (in honour of M. Zeyher, director of the Botanic Garden at Baden.) A genus of plants, natives of Brazil: Order, Bigoniaceæ.

ZETTANDITE.—See Ceylanite.

ZICHYA, zik'ya, s. (in honour of Countess Molly Zich, a botanist at Vienna.) A genus of Leguminous plants: Suborder, Papilionaceæ.

ZIBETT, zi-bet', or zib'it, s. A genus of animals allied to, and long confounded with, the Civet Cat; the Viverra zibetta of Linnæus.

ZIERIA—ZIPHODON.

ZIERIA, ze're-a, s. (in honour of the learned and industrious Polish botanist, Mr. Zier, who assisted Mr. Dickson in his Cryptogamia.) A genus of plants: Order, Cinchonaceæ.

ZIGADENUS, zig-a-de'nus, s. (zygos, a yoke, and aden, a gland, Gr. two being in the sepals.) A genus of plants: Order, Melanthaceæ.

ZIGZAG, zig'zag, a. Having short turns;—s. a line having sharp and quick turns.

ZILLA, zil'la, s. (the Arabic name of the plant.) A genus of Cruciferous plants: Suborder, Orthoploceæ.

ZIMENT, zim'ent, s. Ziment-water, or copper-water, is a name given to water found in copper mines, or water impregnated with copper.

ZINC, zing'k, s. A metal found in nature in combination with oxygen, carbonic acid, and sulphuric acid, and mineralized by sulphur. Natural oxide of zinc is called calamine. It occurs in a loose compact form, amorphous, and of a white, grey, yellow, or brown colour, without transparency; and combined with carbonic acid, it is called vitreous zinc ore, or native carbonate of zinc. It is found in solid masses, sometimes in six-sided prisms, having the ends terminated in pentagons. Sulphate of zinc is found efflorescent in the form of stalactites, or in rhombs. Sulphuret of zinc is the most abundant of the zinc ores. Metallic zinc has a bluish-white colour, somewhat brighter than lead, of considerable hardness; so malleable as not to be broken with the hammer, though it cannot be much extended in this way. Flowers of zinc, the oxide of zinc which flies up, on the exposure of the metal to a temperature in the air very little above the melting point, in the form of white flowers. It is called also philosophical wool, and white netting.

ZINGIBER, zin'je-bur, s. (from the original Indian name.) Ginger, a genus of plants, the roots of which are extensively used in medicine: Type of the order Zingiberaceæ.

ZINGIBERACEÆ, zin-jib'er-a'se-e, s. (zingiber, one of the genera.) A natural order of aromatic tropical herbaceous Endogenous plants, the rhizome creeping and often jointed; leaves simple, with a single midrib, from which crowded veins diverge at a right angle; calyx superior, tubular, and three-lobed; corolla tubular, with six segments in two whorls; stamens three; anther two-celled; ovary three-celled; fruit usually capsular, three-celled, and many-seeded.

ZINKENITE, zing'ken-ite, s. (after the discoverer, M. Zinken.) A mineral of a steel-grey colour, crystalized in six-sided prisms, terminated in by low six-sided pyramids; lustre strongly metallic; opaque. Constituents—sulphur, 22.58; lead, 31.84; copper, 0.42; antimony, 44.39: sp. gr. 5.303; hardness = 3 to 3.5.

ZINKIFEROUS, zing-kif'er-us, a. Producing zinc.

ZINKY, zing'k, a. Pertaining to or containing zinc; having the appearance of zinc.

ZINNA, zin'ne-a, s. (in honour of John Zinn, a German botanist, who published, in 1757, a catalogue of plants in the garden of Gottingen.) A genus of handsome Composite annual plants, with persistent flowers; Suborder, Tubulifloræ.

ZIPHODON, zif'o-don, s. (ziphos, a sword, and ichthys, a fish, Gr.) A genus of fossil animals, belonging to the Anoplotherian family; supposed by Cuvier to have lived in the manner of our deer, and to have been covered remains occur in the tertiary for ZIRCON, zer'kon, s. The jargon-eral found in that island with tourmaline, and iron-sand: the crystal is an octahedron, composed of four-sided prisms; the common form four-sided prism. The constituent silica, and a minute portion of iron.

ZIRCONIA, zer-ko'ne-a, s. An oxide of zirconium, discovered by Klaproth of Ceylon, and subsequently in Expailly, in France. It resembles pear-sugar, and is hard enough to scratch glass when pure, it is a white powder.

ZIRCONITE, zer'kon-ite, s. A variety of zirconia, commonly obtained in black powder.

ZIVOLA, ziv'o-la, s. A bird resembling a hammer, and considered by some as a new species.

ZIZANIA, ziz-a'ne-a, s. (zizania) Canada Rice, a genus of plants, America: Order, Gramineæ.

ZIZIA, ziz'e-a, s. (in honour of J. I. Zizia, a botanist.) A genus of Umbelliferous plants: Suborder, Orthosperma.

ZIZIL, ziz'el, s. A name of the Citillus, called also the Susslik and It is a small quadruped, a native of many, and also of Asia.

ZIZIPHORA, ziz-if'o-ra, s. (the ziziphora and phorea, I bear, Gr.) A genus of plants: Order, Lamiaceæ.

ZIZIPHUS, ziz'o-fus, s. (altered by asajifa, its name in the East.) A genus of plants: Z. lotus is the true Lotus of antiquity.

ZOANTHROPY, zo-an'throp-e, s. (from anthropos, a man, Gr.) a doctrine which the patient believes him to be one of the lower animals.

ZOARCHIDEÆ, zo-är'ke-de, s. (zoarchis, a family of Acanthopterygians, the bodies of which are anguilliform, and anal fins united; the ZOARCHUS, zo-är'kus, s. (zoarchis, Gr.) A genus of fishes: Type, Zoarchine.

ZOCCO, zok'ko, } s. (zoccola, }
ZOCCLE, zok'kl, } a buskin, ZOCCOLO, zok'kol-o, } tecture, under the base of a pedestal, &c. support of a bust, statue, or column.

ZODIAC, zo'de-ak, s. (zodiaque, Lat. and Span. zodiacus, Lat. zodiakos, animal, Gr.) A broad belt in the sky containing the twelve signs, through which the sun passes in its annual course. The belt is the ecliptic, which is the line of intersection of the equator at an angle of 23 degrees and 28 minutes. This is the zodiacal light;—a girdle.

By his side
As in a glittering zodiac, hung Satan's dire dread; and in his triangular figure, lying nearly in the ecliptic, its base being on the horizon, and its apex at varying altitudes.

ZÆGEA, zæ'je-a, s. A genus of Composite plants: Suborder, Tubulifloræ.

ZOIATRIA, zo-e-at're-a, s. (zoon, an animal, and iatria, medical treatment, Gr.) The treatment of the diseases of the lower animals.

ZOISITE, zo'e-site, s. (after its discoverer, Baron Von Zois.) A mineral usually of a grey colour, and crystalized in oblique prisms, which are rarely perfect owing to deep longitudinal striae. An analysis by Klaproth gives—silica, 45.; alumina, 29.; lime, 21.; protoxide of iron, 8.: sp. gr. 3.32; hardness = 6.25.

ZONARIA, zo-na're-a, s. A genus of beautiful marine plants, marked with transverse zones or lines, in which the organs of reproduction are supposed to exist.

ZONATE, zo'na-te, a. In Botany, having a dark belt in the shape of a horse-shoe, as in some species of Pelargonium.

ZONE, zone, s. (zona, Lat. zone, Gr.) A girdle. In Geography, a division of the earth, with respect to the temperature of different latitudes. The zones are five in number: the torrid zone, extending from tropic to tropic, 46° 56', or 23° 28' on each side of the equator; two temperate or variable zones, situated between the tropics and the polar circles; two frigid, between the polar circles and the poles; circuit; circumference. Ciliary zone, in Anatomy, the black impression of the ciliary processes on the vitreous humour of the eye.

ZONED, zonde, a. Wearing a belt.

ZONICHTHYS, zo-nik'this, s. (zone, a belt, and ichthys, a fish, Gr.) A genus of fishes, body oval, and covered with minute scales: Family, Zeidae.

ZONITES, zo-ni'tes, s. A genus of Mollusca, belonging to the Helicinae, or common Land-snails, the shells of which are subventricose, but the body whorl depressed; the margin convex; the spire often of many whorls; the outer lip thin; and the umbilicus open: Family, Helicidae.

ZONNAR, zon'nar, s. A belt or girdle which the Christians and Jews in the Levant are obliged to wear, to distinguish them from the Mohammedans.

ZONOTRICHIA, zo-no-trik'e-a, s. (zone, a belt, and thrix, hair, Gr.) A genus of birds, natives of America: Family, Fringillidae.

ZONURUS, zo-nu'rus, s. (zone, a belt, and oura, a tail, Gr.) A genus of Lizards, so named from the depressed tail having whorls of large square-keeled spinous scales: Family, Lacertidae.

ZOOGRAPHER, zo-og'graf-ur, s. One skilled in the natural history of animals; one who describes animals as to form or habits.

ZOOGRAPHICAL, zo-o-graf'e-kal, a. Pertaining to zoography.

ZOOGRAPHY, zo-og'graf-e, s. (zoon, an animal, and grapho, I draw, Gr.) Description or delineation of animals.

ZOOLITE, zo'o-lite, s. (zoon, an animal, and lithos, a stone, Gr.) A petrified animal.

ZOOLITHOGRAPHY, zo-o-lith-og'gra-fe, s. (zoon, an animal, lithos, a stone, and grapho, I describe, Gr.) A description of fossil animal remains.

ZOOLITHOLOGY, zo-o-lith-ol'o-je, s. (zoon, an animal, lithos, a stone, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) A treatise on fossil animal remains.

ZOOLOGICAL, zo-o-loj'e-kal, a. Relating to zoology.

ZOOLOGIST, zo-ol'o-jist, s. One who studies the natural history of animals.

ZOOLOGY, zo-ol'o-je, s. (zoon, an animal, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) The natural history of animals.

ZOONOMIA, zo-o-no'me-a, } s. (zoon, an animal, and ZOONOMY, zo-on'o-me, } nomos, a law, Gr.)
A treatise on the laws of animal life, as, the zoonomia of Dr. Darwin.

ZOONOSLOGY, zo-o-nos-ol'o-je, s. A word of the same meaning as Zoopathology.

ZOOPATHOLOGY, zo-o-path-ol'o-je, s. (zoon, an animal, pathos, disease, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) The doctrine of the diseases of animals.

ZOOPHAGOUS, zo-of'a-gus, a. Feeding on animals.

ZOOPHORIC, zo-of'o-rik, a. (zoon, an animal, and phoreo, I bear, Gr.) In Architecture, applied to a column which supports the figure of an animal.

ZOOPHORUS, zo-of'o-rus, s. In ancient Architecture, the same with the frieze of modern architecture, a part between the architrave and cornice, so called from the figures of animals carved upon it.

ZOOPHYSIOLOGICAL, zo-o-fiz-e-o-loj'e-kal, a. Relating to zoophysiology.

ZOOPHYSIOLOGY, zo-o-fiz-e-ol'o-je, s. Animal physiology.

ZOOPHYTE, zo'o-fite, s. (zoon, an animal, and phyton, a plant, Gr.) Literally, an animal, plant, or being, forming the connecting link between plants and animals, as sponges, corals, &c.

ZOOPHYTOGRAPHICAL, zo-o-fe-to-graf'e-kal, a. Pertaining to zoophytography.

ZOOPHYTOGRAPHY, zo-o-fe-tog'gra-fe, s. (zoon, an animal, phyton, a plant, and grapho, I describe, Gr.) A description of zoophytes.

ZOOPHYTOLOGICAL, zo-o-fe-to-loj'e-kal, a. Pertaining to zoophytology.

ZOOPHYTOLOGY, zo-o-fe-tol'o-je, s. (zoon, an animal, phyton, and logos, a discourse, Gr.) A treatise on zoophytes.
